How to Access Our Reports

We've got you covered! Access our reports in the way that works best for you.

On Your Computer

All three of the U.S. Department of Labor's (USDOL) flagship reports on international child labor and forced labor are available on our website in HTML and PDF formats at dol.gov/ChildLaborReports. These reports include Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor, as required by the Trade and Development Act of 2000; List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor, as required by the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2005; and List of Products Produced by Forced or Indentured Child Labor, as required by Executive Order 13126. On our website, you can navigate to individual country pages where you can find information on the prevalence and sectoral distribution of the worst forms of child labor; specific goods produced by child labor or forced labor; efforts each country has made to implement their commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in the areas of laws and regulations, institutional mechanisms for enforcement and coordination, and government policies and social programs; and specific suggestions for government actions to address the issue. You can also access the Department's Better Trade Tool on our website at dol.gov/BetterTradeTool. This tool's dynamic dashboards and custom queries allows users to view U.S. and global trade at potential child labor and forced labor risks in global supply chains and conduct trade data analysis.

On Your Phone

The Department's Sweat & Toil mobile application contains more than 1,000 pages of research from all three reports. Sweat & Toil helps you easily sort data by region, country, assessment level, good, and type of exploitation, all without the need for an internet connection. The app also includes information from USDOL's technical assistance and cooperation projects around the world. Additionally, the app includes new data visualizations allowing users to view goods produced with exploitative labor by region and sector, as well as the sectoral distribution of where children work by country. You can download the free app from Apple's App Store or the Google Play Store and access the data on our website at dol.gov/AppSweat&Toil.

The Department's Comply Chain: Business Tools for Labor Compliance in Global Supply Chains mobile application is a practical, step-by-step guide for companies on ways to develop strong social compliance systems to reduce child labor and forced labor in supply chains. Whether new to social compliance or wanting to improve existing systems, companies can explore modules including stakeholder engagement, code of conduct provisions, auditing, remediation, reporting, and engagement, among others. This year there are considerable content updates across all areas of Comply Chain, including a dozen of specific examples that incorporate worker voice as a fundamental component of each step in a due diligence set of best practices to address child labor and forced labor in global supply chains. You can download the free app from Apple's App Store or the Google Play Store or access it online at dol.gov/AppComplyChain.

On Paper

The Sweat & Toil magazine is published in hardcopy and provides an overall summary of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor, regional findings related to meaningful efforts made and gaps for countries to address, the assessment levels of each of the 131 countries, and the updated List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor. Send an e-mail to GlobalKids@dol.gov to request hard copies or download them from the Department's website at dol.gov/ChildLaborReports.

Foreword

Eliminating egregious labor abuse requires all of us—governments, businesses, unions, workers, and civil society—to play our part. ILAB’s reporting shines a light on child labor and forced labor, pressuring governments to answer for egregious practices. We provide concrete policy recommendations for governments to enhance social protection and create the conditions for decent work – key factors in combating child labor and forced labor. Our tools and resources strengthen unions’, worker organizations’, and civil society’s advocacy and outreach and provide companies with the tools to root out child labor and forced labor from their supply chains.

The United States takes our responsibility to end child labor and forced labor seriously. Workers in the U.S. and around the world should not have to compete with unscrupulous producers who use child labor and forced labor and undercut the well-being of working families. In December 2021, President Biden signed the Uyghur Forced Labor Prevention Act (UFLPA) to strengthen the U.S. government’s ability to combat forced labor and protect U.S.-bound supply chains from these labor abuses. As a member of the Forced Labor Enforcement Task Force, the Department of Labor will continue to work to develop a UFLPA enforcement strategy that ensures U.S. businesses and consumers do not unwittingly support violations of human and labor rights.

But we all know that the most powerful force for change in the workplace is workers themselves. For over a century, workers have acted through unions to lead the fight to end child labor. At its first convention in 1881, the American Federation of Labor passed a resolution calling on states to set a minimum age for work. More than 140 years later, the fight continues on a global scale, with 160 million children engaged in child labor worldwide. Winning that fight requires workers to have the right to organize and bargain collectively for family-sustaining wages, benefits, and social protection. It requires that workers have the voice and support to denounce exploitative and dangerous working conditions, and collectively advocate for better ones—so that families can find economic security and let their children be children, and so that no one’s labor is forced from them. That is why the Department of Labor announced the Multilateral Partnership for Organizing, Worker Empowerment, and Rights last year (M-POWER). M-POWER supports workers having the right to choose strong, independent, and democratic unions and helps workers’ representatives have an equal footing with employers and governments worldwide in critical social and economic decisions.

Our reports do more than provide information; they have the potential to catalyze action. So don’t just read our reports, use them. Eliminating child labor and forced labor requires us all—governments, employers, unions, workers, and civil society—to do our part. You have a part to play in the fight to end child labor and forced labor and secure decent work for all. Advocate for workers everywhere to have a voice in the workplace. Hold businesses and governments accountable for respecting and upholding workers’ rights. Together, we will fight for all workers’ rights morning, noon, and night.

Statement

This year's edition of Sweat and Toil comes at a critical time. Global estimates from the International Labor Organization show millions continue to toil in abusive labor conditions. Many of them labor in the shadows, out of reach of regulation. They work in homes, mines, or fields that labor inspectors rarely visit, and at the bottom end of global supply chains, far out of sight of the consumers who ultimately purchase their products. At the Bureau of International Labor Affairs (ILAB), our reporting makes these unseen people visible, exposing the countries responsible for labor rights abuses.

This year, ILAB is working under an expanded mandate to conduct research and global supply chain tracing to track inputs made with child labor or forced labor, instead of looking only at final goods. In making people more aware of the entire supply chain, we are upping the ante for governments, companies and consumers alike. We are drawing attention to critical supply chains in clean energy—highlighting China's use of forced labor in polysilicon production (a key input in solar panels) and the use of child labor in the Democratic Republic of the Congo for the mining of cobalt (an input in lithium-ion batteries). The information is out there for companies and consumers to leverage against regimes that promote and prop up exploitative labor practices. ILAB's reporting and tools are making an unprecedented amount of information on abusive labor practices around the world available to the public. Our research complements whole-of-government efforts like the Burma Business Advisory, which highlights the risks of doing business in Burma due to corruption, illicit finance, and human rights abuses, including forced labor.

But our reporting is not just about sharing data. Our reporting also informs the Biden-Harris

Administration's bold commitment to put worker rights at the center of trade and foreign policy. Under this administration's leadership, the United States has taken many significant steps: added its voice to the statement of the G7—a group of seven of the world's advanced democracies—to affirm there is no place for forced labor in a rules-based multilateral trading system; pledged to combat child labor during the International Year for the Elimination of Child Labor; and launched the forward-looking M-POWER (Multilateral Partnership on Organizing, Worker Empowerment, and Rights) initiative, the U.S. government's largest commitment ever to securing workers' right to free, independent, and democratic trade unions on a global scale.

The protection of human rights, including labor rights, is essential to uplifting American values and interests. And the protection of children from child labor is vital for safeguarding children's future as citizens of their countries and the world. As you read this edition of Sweat and Toil, know that ILAB is using this data and analysis to drive change. Through our reporting, labor diplomacy, trade enforcement, and technical assistance programs, we are working to promote worker rights, decent work, and stable livelihoods for working families around the world.

Purpose of This Report

Research Focus of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The U.S. Department of Labor has prepared the 2021 Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor in accordance with the Trade and Development Act of 2000 (TDA). (1) The TDA set forth the requirement that a country must implement its commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor for the President of the United States to designate the country a beneficiary developing country under the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) program (subject to an exception if designation is in the national economic interest of the United States). (2; 3) The TDA also mandated that the President submit to the United States Congress the Secretary of Labor's findings with respect to each "beneficiary country's implementation of its international commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor." (1) ILAB carries out this responsibility on behalf of the Secretary.

Country Coverage

This report covers 119 independent countries and 15 non-independent countries and territories designated as GSP beneficiaries. This includes former GSP recipients who have negotiated free-trade agreements with the United States. (4) Because the population of children is extremely small (fewer than 50) or non-existent in the British Indian Ocean Territory, Heard Island and McDonald Islands, and the Pitcairn Islands, the report does not contain a discussion of these three non-independent countries and territories. The 2021 report presents information on child labor and the worst forms of child labor, and efforts to eliminate this exploitation in the remaining 119 countries and 12 non-independent countries and territories. The use of "countries" in this report includes territories, and because the report focuses on government efforts, non-independent countries and territories are classified by their associated regions.

Population Covered

In undertaking research on the “worst forms of child labor,” ILAB relied on the definition contained in International Labor Organization Convention No. 182 on the Worst Forms of Child Labor (ILO C. 182), which defines “child” as a person under age 18.

Reporting Period

The reporting period for this year’s report is January 2021 through December 2021. In certain cases, significant events or government efforts that occurred in early 2022 were included, as appropriate.

Type of Work

This report focuses on child labor and the worst forms of child labor. Definitions related to these types of work are primarily guided by International Labor Organization Convention No. 138 on Minimum Age (ILO C. 138) and ILO C. 182. Child labor includes work below the age of 15 (14 in developing economies where specified at the time of ratification of C. 138) or the higher minimum age as established in national legislation (excluding permissible light work) and the worst forms of child labor. The definition of the “worst forms of child labor” is found in the TDA and is the same as that included in ILO C. 182. It includes (a) all forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery, such as the sale or trafficking of children, debt bondage and serfdom, or forced or compulsory labor, including forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict; (b) the use, procuring, or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography, or for pornographic performances; (c) the use, procuring, or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs; and (d) work which, by its nature or the circumstances under which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety, or morals of children. (1; 5) Similar to ILO C. 182, the TDA states that the work described in subparagraph (d) should be “determined by the laws, regulations, or competent authority of the country involved.”

Ensuring the Future of Work is Fair for All

As the world began to recognize the gravity of COVID-19 in early 2020, the term “essential worker” emerged as new vocabulary. From a narrow definition of front-line workers in public health, medicine, and emergency services, the list of “essential workers” expanded, to include workers in sectors like transportation, education and childcare, agriculture and food production, and retail and delivery. As the pandemic wore on and economies suffered shortages of goods and workers, as well as higher consumer prices, the concept of essential workers gave way to recognition of a new reality: All workers are essential. Workers drive the massive, global supply chains that deliver everything we rely on in our daily lives, from baby food to solar panels.

Increased Vulnerability

The pandemic disrupted economies across the globe, with acute consequences for workers. Many workers who abruptly lost their jobs temporarily or permanently sought other ways to earn needed income, including informal work. The burden of the pandemic fell heavily on countries, communities, and individuals least able to absorb the shock, especially already disadvantaged people and vulnerable groups. According to 2020 estimates from the World Bank, between 703 and 729 million people live in extreme poverty surviving on less than $1.90 a day, and as many as 150 million people may be pushed into extreme poverty because of the pandemic. Poverty is associated with vulnerabilities beyond low income: Individuals who are poor lack mechanisms to cope with economic shocks and suffer disproportionately from poor health, hunger, and inadequate access to education and social services. Poverty forces people to take risks to survive, making them more vulnerable to labor exploitation. These vulnerabilities are more severe for systemically and institutionally oppressed racial and ethnic minority groups.

Worker Safety and Health

As the world builds back from this pandemic, workers cannot be an afterthought. Worker safety is now top of mind, especially for the “essential workers” who risked their health staying on the job throughout the pandemic. In June of 2022, the International Labor Organization’s tripartite government, employer, and worker representatives made a landmark decision to adopt a resolution to add the principle of a safe and healthy working environment to the ILO's Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work. (6) A safe workplace does not mean just physical safety, but safety in knowing that human rights and all Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work are respected and honored. Safe workplaces protect workers against COVID-19 and occupational illnesses, and also protect workers' rights to freedom of association and collective bargaining. A safe workplace is free from discrimination in respect of employment and occupation. And a safe workplace is free from child labor and forced labor.

ILAB's Research and Reporting

As the largest government agency in the world dedicated to improving global working conditions and countering labor abuses, the Bureau of International Labor Affairs (ILAB) is uniquely positioned to address labor abuses in supply chains on a global level.

ILAB's research collects timely, accurate, and reliable information about the problem of global labor abuses, including relevant laws, regulations, policies, and best practices.

Our reporting—like our annual Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor report, our biannual update of the List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor, and this year's update to our List of Products Produced by Forced or Indentured Child Labor—is especially vital this year due to additions that have been identified as downstream goods made with inputs produced by child labor or forced labor. In addition, the International Labor Organization's new global estimates on forced labor show an increase from 24.9 to 27.6 million people worldwide since 2016. (120)

The Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor report focuses on the efforts of 131 countries and territories to eliminate the worst forms of child labor through legislation, enforcement mechanisms, policies, and social programs. This year's Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor report highlights more than 100 gaps related to vulnerable groups, ranging from children with disabilities, refugees, girls, and Roma children to LGBTQI+ children and indigenous groups, among others.

ILAB's List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor and the List of Products Produced by Forced or Indentured Child Labor highlight particular goods and products with evidence of abusive labor practices. In this research, ILAB employs a systematic and rigorous process, supporting the collection of in-country data, traveling to conduct firsthand research in hard-to-reach places, and corroborating reports of labor abuses with credible international and local sources.

This year, for the first time, ILAB put in place measures to respond to a new congressional mandate under the Frederick Douglass Trafficking Victims Prevention and Protection Reauthorization Act of 2018 (TVPPRA). With this new mandate, the TVPPRA requires ILAB reporting to include in our List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor, as practical, goods that are produced with inputs made with forced or child labor in violation of international standards. For example, if cotton produced by forced labor in one country is imported by another country to produce garments, then those garments could be placed on our List. This year, for the first time, the List identifies specific supply chains that include inputs made in violation of international labor standards.

ILAB's reports provide actionable information to U.S. federal government agencies to safeguard federal procurement and prevent the import of goods made with prohibited labor. We also use these reports to help foreign governments build their capacity to end labor exploitation in their countries. Together, these reports also serve as a foundation and critical resource for many companies as part of their ongoing efforts to reduce labor abuse across their supply chains and global production networks.

Using ILAB's Research: Tools for the Public

In addition to the three flagship reports on international child labor and forced labor, ILAB produces other tools for the public that leverage our research. Beyond the Sweat & Toil app that covers detail from ILAB's reports, be sure to read on and learn more about Comply Chain—a standard set of best practices to address child labor and forced labor in global supply chains—and the Better Trade Tool, which matches our reporting on goods at risk of being produced with child labor or forced labor with international trade data.

ILAB's mobile app Sweat & Toil allows users to access more than 1,000 pages of research from all three of ILAB's flagship reports in an accessible digital format. The app also includes information on ILAB's country programs. This year, the app was updated with data visualizations to allow users to identify goods produced by child labor or forced labor by region or sector, explore regional trends, and display the sectoral distribution of child labor in countries where this information is available. These data visualizations will help stakeholders easily identify trends and use this research to make data-driven decisions.

ILAB provides companies with a practical, step-by-step guide to address child labor and forced labor in global supply chains through Comply Chain: Business Tools for Labor Compliance in Global Supply Chains. As child labor and forced labor continue to present serious and material risks to companies and industries, this smartphone and web-based app assists companies and industry groups seeking to develop robust social compliance systems for their global production. Comply Chain provides detailed guidance on eight critical elements of social compliance, including numerous real-world examples on everything from responsible recruitment to worker voice. Comply Chain is designed for companies that do not have such a system in place or those needing to strengthen their existing systems. It is available in English, French, Malay, and Spanish.

This year's version of Comply Chain includes content updates and highlights a dozen specific examples of worker voice across all steps in the process. Worker voice—broadly defined—encompasses three main categories: representation, empowerment, and engagement. Worker voice is the freedom that workers have to represent their interests, individually and/or collectively. Worker voice is worker empowerment to raise concerns and address conditions and terms of employment. And worker voice is also workers being valued for skills and talents and a partnership to collaborate with management on company vision, process improvement, and project development. As just one example, Comply Chain highlights the vital role of active and strong unions as the constant eyes and ears in the workplace, and shows how effective unions can consistently advocate for positive change and labor compliance as opposed to one-time audits.

In 2021, ILAB launched the data-driven Better Trade Tool, which integrates ILAB's reporting with U.S. import trade data, including Harmonized Tariff Schedule codes. The Better Trade Tool is a resource for users interested in learning about labor exploitation risks in global supply chains. This year, updates include addition of full year 2021 U.S. import trade data, insights into U.S. preferential trade agreements, and global trade data. Tools like the Better Trade Tool help companies take steps to integrate more responsible sourcing practices to minimize child labor and forced labor risks. Read more about how the U.S. government as the single largest purchaser of goods and services in the world leverages resources to demonstrate leadership in the realm of public procurement in Box 1.

Box 1

The Role of Public Procurement in Promoting Responsible Business Practices

How do highways get built, and how do government offices obtain the equipment and manpower necessary to provide services to constituents? The answer is public procurement: the process by which a government agency, such as the U.S. Department of Labor (USDOL), purchases goods and services from an external source, often through a competitive bidding process. Public procurement represents an average of 13 to 20 percent of global GDP. (7) Because public procurement is such a large share of the economy, governments can set the standards for decent work and model expectations for private sector counterparts by exercising and promoting responsible business practices.

Since 2001, the U.S. has relied on the List of Products Produced by Forced or Indentured Child Labor ("EO List," pursuant to Executive Order 13126) to ensure that U.S. federal government agencies do not procure any goods that are produced by forced or indentured child labor. As of this year's publication, the EO List includes 35 products from 26 countries, with the latest addition of bricks from Cambodia.

In addition, the Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR), "Ending Trafficking in Persons" implements anti-trafficking in persons practices for federal contractors and subcontractors. The FAR also requires that contracting officers check USDOL's EO List when issuing solicitations. (8) The EO List alerts contracting personnel that there is a reasonable basis to believe that certain goods may have been mined, produced, or manufactured by forced or indentured child labor. Any federal contractors who supply or wish to supply products on the EO List must certify to the contracting agency that they have made a good faith effort to determine whether forced or indentured child labor was used to produce the items supplied. (9)

USDOL is a co-chair of the Procurement & Supply Chains Committee of the Presidential Interagency Task Force to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons Senior Policy Operating Group, comprising senior officials representing 20 federal agencies and departments that coordinate U.S. government-wide efforts to address trafficking in persons. The committee serves as a forum through which government agencies can coordinate and strengthen procurement safeguards and supply chain efforts, including during the pandemic, when it focused on the procurement of medical and healthcare supplies, such as personal protective equipment.

ILAB Projects: Knowledge in Action

ILAB research influences the design and funding of innovative technical assistance projects to combat labor abuses in global supply chains through collaborative efforts with governments, civil society, unions and democratic worker organizations, companies, and other partners. Since 1995, ILAB has implemented more than 350 projects in 99 countries in partnership with more than 90 organizations and with the support and association of a variety of governments and private sector partners. As the world demands more joint global action on child labor, forced labor, and human trafficking, ILAB is a crucial partner and mentor to those committed to upholding worker rights. Learn more about how ILAB's projects are helping to address entrenched issues of child labor in Box 2.

In El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras, an estimated 1.4 million children are engaged in child labor, a figure that has likely increased due to pandemic-related job loss, school closures, and lockdowns. For families experiencing poverty or an

From Child Laborer to Tailor-in-Training

Felicia started working at the age of 13. One of 18 children, her family could not afford her school fees and needed their children's labor to put food on the table. Felicia joined her siblings in the intensive and hazardous work of planting, harvesting, and selling cocoa and palm fruit.

On many small farms, like the one on which Felicia toiled, children engaging in agricultural work carry heavy loads, use sharp tools, burn fields, and handle dangerous agrochemicals, all of which can harm their development and health.

"I thought harvesting palm fruit was a normal thing until I got my legs twisted after I fell from a palm tree," Felicia recalls.

Felicia's story is not uncommon. In Ghana, where she lives, the average girl only receives 4 years of education and is vulnerable to child labor, especially on smallholder farms in the country's cocoa supply chain. Ghanaian girls make up more than half of the child laborers engaged in cocoa production. These challenges, along with early pregnancy and violence, hinder opportunities for girls between the ages of 10 and 19, and this trend has worsened as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic.

The Bureau of International Labor Affairs' Adwuma Pa project is working to change this by providing women and adolescent girls more opportunities for education and training to help them secure decent work in and outside of the cocoa sector. These strategies help reduce participants' risk of child labor, forced labor, and other labor rights violations. The project has helped women and adolescent girls increase their earning potential as well as their ability to express their voice on behalf of themselves as workers.

Through the project, Felicia enrolled in a 3-month intensive soft skills training when she was 17 years old and is currently completing a vocational training program in which she is learning to become a tailor. With her new confidence and job skills, she will have a better chance to chart a future with economic autonomy, away from the fields where she toiled as a child.

"The vocational training has been a life-changer for me. As I speak now, if not for the vocational training I am enrolled in, I would have been at the farm by now," she says. "I see myself as becoming one of the best fashion designers in the Tano South Municipality. All my family members have been encouraging me to keep focused on the training to achieve my dreams."

economic shock like the ones caused by COVID-19 or 2020's devastating hurricanes Eta and Iota, workers' access to decent work and enjoyment of full labor rights can determine whether families must send a child into child labor for income, find work in the informal economy that may turn out to be exploitative, or even migrate abroad to find work elsewhere. In December 2021, ILAB awarded the Pan American Development Foundation a new project that seeks to strengthen civil society and workers' organizations' ability to partner with other actors to combat labor exploitation in the region. The project will directly support 45 civil society and workers' organizations to improve their operations and ability to address labor exploitation. These organizations represent indigenous, Afro-descendant, and Garifuna populations, and the project provides an opportunity to increase equitable access to services for these vulnerable groups. The project will also encourage governments and the private sector to proactively engage with civil society and workers on these issues. Learn more about one of ILAB's other projects in Latin America below in Box 3, in Malaysia in Box 4, and general project information in Figures 1 and 2.

Cleaning Up the Coffee Supply Chain in Latin America

The Cooperation On Fair, Free, Equitable Employment (COFFEE) Project is a 4-year initiative that aims to reduce the risk of labor exploitation in coffee supply chains by building capacity within the private sector, civil society, and government to better understand, identify, address, and prevent labor abuses. The COFFEE project has created a Socially Sustainable Sourcing Toolkit comprising 17 tools that businesses and other stakeholders can selectively apply to proactively identify and address the root causes of labor abuses in their operations. The toolkit is based on ILAB's Comply Chain app, which provides a practical, step-by-step guide to critical elements of social compliance.

The COFFEE project has developed a set of eight online training modules on these topics, which have already been implemented with 58 participants from key private-sector stakeholders in Mexico. At the 2022 Specialty Coffee Expo, the largest coffee industry event in North America, the COFFEE project publicly launched its toolkit, which is now available on the project's website. In addition to the Socially Sustainable Sourcing Toolkit and training modules, the COFFEE project is implementing pilot projects in Brazil, Colombia, and Mexico to identify, address, and prevent labor risks in those countries' coffee supply chains. Each pilot has a unique theme, with Brazil focusing on ethical recruitment, Colombia exploring alternatives to piece-rate pay, and Mexico working on capacity building within the private sector.

Empowering Migrant Workers in Malaysia

Migrant workers are particularly vulnerable to egregious forms of labor exploitation, including forced labor and child labor, and often lack access to unions or other capable organizations that enable them to safely advocate for their rights or collectively voice their needs. The ILAB-funded, $5 million MY Voice Project to Combat Forced Labor and Child Labor in the Production of Goods in Malaysia is designed to help meet these challenges through strategies that emphasize the role of worker voice in finding solutions. MY Voice will deliver training modules and workshops to increase understanding among trade unions, civil society, migrant worker community leaders, government labor inspectors, and recruitment agencies in Malaysia about the root causes of forced labor and child labor in two key industries—palm oil and garment production. The project will encourage participants to take action to prevent, identify, and remediate labor rights abuses in these sectors. In addition, MY Voice will leverage partnerships with multinational companies to improve suppliers' compliance with labor standards through models that incorporate worker voice. The project will also provide technical support to integrate worker perspectives into palm oil and garment companies' management and compliance systems, including company risk assessments, policies, communication, compliance monitoring, performance reporting, and worker grievance mechanisms. The new MY Voice project is just one example of ILAB's work in the region. Just last year, ILAB launched its Comply Chain due diligence toolkit in Malay, the official language in Malaysia.

Counterfeiting and Labor Rights Violations

During the pandemic, many consumers increasingly shifted their buying online, taking part in digital trade. As digital trade has grown in scope and scale, consumers—and even businesses—have increasingly struggled to determine who is making the goods and products they buy, and under what conditions.

Research has shown that persistent labor abuse overlaps with bad practices like counterfeiting, and that many counterfeit goods find their way to online marketplaces.

Non-governmental organizations and industry representatives have reported that factories in China making counterfeit products often have unsafe working conditions that violate local or international environmental, health, and safety standards. Detecting these facilities is difficult because facility operators take measures to evade notice of their illegal operations. For example, some factories producing counterfeit goods operate at night or with blacked-out windows and limited ventilation, even if they use dangerous chemicals. Yet, law enforcement raids on counterfeiting facilities rarely involve participation from labor inspectors, which means labor rights abuses go undetected and unresolved, and workers who have been compelled by coercion or force to produce counterfeit goods have little recourse.

According to ILAB research of global data, products most commonly counterfeited include garments, electronics, footwear, and fashion accessories—product categories also associated with labor exploitation, including child labor and forced labor. China is the top country of origin for counterfeit goods seized by U.S. Customs and Border Protection, as well as the country with the greatest number of products made with forced labor, including state-sponsored forced labor. In the early days of the pandemic, when the global demand for personal protective equipment (PPE) and other COVID-19-related products was high, there were many reports of labor violations in the production of counterfeit goods. These counterfeit products were reportedly made in unsterile conditions, including in sweatshops previously used to make other types of counterfeit goods.

As an example of ILAB's role in addressing forced labor in the medical supplies sector, ILAB added rubber gloves produced in Malaysia to its List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor in 2020. This addition was based on an investigation into the UK's National Health Service supply chains by The Guardian in 2018 found that migrant workers at Top Glove had experienced exploitative conditions, including excessive overtime, passport confiscation, withholding of wages, and other indicators of forced labor. During the pandemic, rising demand for PPE, restriction of movement to contain the spread of the virus, and the cessation of in-person audits exacerbated long-standing labor abuses. On July 15, 2020, U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) issued a Withhold Release Order (WRO) that banned Malaysian company Top Glove-produced rubber gloves from import into the United States because the gloves were made by forced labor. Under the WRO, CBP seized several shipments of disposable gloves that originated in Malaysia. On September 9, 2021, CBP issued a modification of its forced labor findings on Top Glove, allowing imports to resume. In the press release, CBP affirmed that Top Glove has “issued more than $30 million in remediation payments to workers and improved labor and living conditions at the company’s facilities,” which is consistent with a final statement released in October 2021 by Impactt Limited, a UK-based independent consultancy firm specializing in human rights and ethical trade practices, including the remediation of forced labor. The transparency of Top Glove’s remediation process—swift implementation of Impactt’s recommendations, including payments to migrant workers directly employed by Top Glove, an independent grievance mechanism, and continuous and effective public reporting of corrective actions—was instrumental in remediating an identified forced labor issue.

Trade Tools to Address Forced Labor

Through negotiation, monitoring, and enforcement of labor provisions in U.S. trade agreements, ILAB ensures that parties to trade agreements adopt, maintain, and enforce the five core labor rights contained in the ILO Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work. (6)

The recent United States–Mexico–Canada Free Trade Agreement (USMCA) includes the strongest and most far-reaching labor provisions in any trade agreement in the world. The USMCA and its implementing legislation achieved two novel outcomes related to forced labor: 1) provisions prohibiting all parties from importing goods made with forced labor, meaning the U.S., Mexico, and Canada are each required to prohibit the import of goods made with forced labor from entering their respective territories, and 2) the establishment of an interagency body to monitor forced labor trade enforcement—the Forced Labor Enforcement Task Force (FLETF). (11; 12; 13)

In addition to participating in the FLETF and providing reporting and country- and sector-specific labor expertise to other parts of the U.S. government, ILAB supports the effective implementation of the USMCA by collaborating with the government of Mexico, conducting and supporting research to raise awareness on the prevalence and risk of child labor and forced labor in Mexico, funding programs to improve worker rights, increasing labor law enforcement, and addressing child labor and forced labor in the production of agricultural products. Two recent ILAB programs in Mexico provide support to Mexico’s federal government and private sector to improve compliance with USMCA labor commitments: Sustentar: Project to Build and Strengthen Sustainability Systems in the Tomato and Chile Sectors in Mexico, and Building a Comprehensive Government of Mexico Approach to Combatting Child Labor and Forced Labor. ILAB is also planning to fund a third project: Una Cosecha Justa (A Just Harvest): Project to Reduce Child Labor, Forced Labor, and Other Exploitation in the Chile Pepper and Tomato Sectors in Mexico. These projects seek to improve implementation and enforcement of policies and programs dedicated to combating child labor and forced labor and increase stakeholders' compliance with Mexican labor laws and the USMCA labor chapter. (14; 15)

ILAB's projects are global in scope to match the global nature of labor abuses. Informality is a key ongoing challenge that can exacerbate child labor and forced labor risks. Learn more about informality as a driver of child labor in Box 5. In addition, Box 6 highlights the risks of child labor in the production of new, green technologies such as lithium-ion batteries that power the growing number of electric vehicles on the road today. Cobalt is a key input for those batteries and is often mined using child labor.

Informality and Child Labor Risks

Many of the 160 million children that the ILO and UNICEF estimate to be engaged in child labor are working in the informal sector. (16) The informal economy is made up of individuals who work in unregistered jobs or enterprises, often with little to no legal oversight, poor working conditions, and a lack of social protection for workers. For children, informal work often includes work on small-scale farms, street vending, and domestic labor. With few protections under national laws, children working in the informal economy are at a heightened risk of child labor.

In many countries, including in both Bangladesh and Mozambique, labor laws do not apply to children in the informal sector. (17; 18) In these cases, monitoring and inspection are often inadequate and labor laws are poorly enforced. This lack of oversight is driven by the challenge of tracking unregistered businesses, the difficulty of accessing locations where children are informally employed (especially in homes as domestic workers or in rural fields as agricultural workers), and by resource constraints. Poor enforcement leaves children effectively unprotected by legal minimum age requirements for work and hour limitations. Gaps in enforcement also increase the likelihood of children experiencing dangerous working conditions, such as handling hazardous tools and chemicals, that are likely to harm the development of the child.

Not only does informal work contribute to child labor, but the lack of access to social protection systems leaves workers in the informal sector vulnerable to economic shocks and poverty, a root cause of child labor. The precariousness of informal work was evident during the COVID-19 pandemic when adult workers in the informal sector faced barriers to accessing social protection programs, such as unemployment relief or employment benefits like severance pay and sick leave. This vulnerability and loss of income drove millions of informal workers into increased poverty, resulting in an increase in child labor as children took on paid work opportunities to support themselves and their families. Children's participation in child labor was also exacerbated by school closures. For the first time in decades, progress toward eliminating child labor has reversed and the number of children working in conditions of child labor has increased. (16)

Child Labor in Global Supply Chains: Cobalt

The most recent global estimates on child labor from the ILO revealed that a significant share of child labor in global supply chains occurs in the lower tiers of those supply chains, specifically in activities such as raw material extraction and agriculture. (19)

Raw materials that go into various products we use daily—from clothing to coffee and tea—carry a risk of being made with child labor. Smartphones and laptops contain a vital component widely known to be produced with child labor: the lithium-ion battery made with cobalt mined in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC).

Thousands of children miss school and work in terrible conditions to produce cobalt for lithium-ion batteries, a product which carries a label that simply says, “produced in China.” Entire families may work in cobalt mines in the DRC, and when parents are killed by landslides or collapsing mine shafts, children are orphaned with no option but to continue working. (20) Both adults and children are also trafficked to work in eastern DRC “artisanal” mines, where much of the abusive labor conditions occur. (21)

Tracking the cobalt supply chain requires knowledge of trade data, supplier information, transport routes, and processing steps. While large-scale mining operations get more oversight than smaller, artisanal mines, cobalt from both large-scale mines and artisanal mines are refined together, predominantly in China, and then further processed into battery components and sold to consumers, who are unaware that the product contains an input that is often produced with child labor.

As ILAB continues to expand its downstream supply chain tracing work with new research and tools, companies will have fewer excuses—such as the distance between raw materials and the finished product or supply chain complexity—to point to for their lack of accountability in determining if a supply chain is tainted with child labor or forced labor.

Data as a Driver for Global Action

Overcoming the challenges of addressing long-standing labor abuse requires knowledge and data. ILAB’s reporting and other tools and resources are at the forefront of the effort to generate and disseminate that knowledge. ILAB’s research is also built on strong and credible data that informs U.S.

policies and actions to eliminate forced labor and child labor, which in turn supports U.S. leadership in global efforts. Yet, knowledge and data on global labor abuses is just the first step. Achieving our global vision of ending child labor requires collaboration between workers, trade unions, businesses, civil society, and other relevant stakeholders.

A new cornerstone of global collaboration to end child labor is the Durban Call to Action adopted by participants, including the United States, at the 5th Global Conference on the Elimination of Child Labor held in May 2022 in South Africa. The Call to Action is a commitment to scale up action to accelerate multi-stakeholder efforts to prevent child labor by making decent work for working age people a reality, end child labor in agriculture, strengthen the prevention and elimination of child labor and the protection of survivors through data-driven and survivor-informed policy, realize children's right to education, achieve universal access to social protection, and increase financing and international cooperation for the elimination of child labor and forced labor. The Call to Action lays out 49 immediate and effective measures to take across these areas. Learn more about our support to the Durban Call to Action in Figure 3.

The U.S. backs its pledges under the Durban Call to Action with a commitment to centering workers in our efforts to build back from COVID-19 and strive for a more just economy. As we adapt to the changes the pandemic imposed on our jobs and lives, we can build the future of work on responsible labor practices and greater respect for labor rights, with dignity at work at the forefront. We must ensure that the future of work is fair for all and that all workers—including women, people of color, and disenfranchised populations—are empowered to freely raise their voices and organize. Empowered, organized workers can speak out against exploitative labor practices, including forced labor and child labor. They negotiate better wages, benefits, and working conditions that reduce families' vulnerability to forced labor and child labor. They can advance democratic values and practices in their workplaces and demand an end to workplace violence and discrimination. They can build stable lives for their families, vibrant communities, inclusive economies, and democratic societies, free from forced labor and child labor.

The Year in Review: Tackling Inequalities for All

COVID-19 continues to impact every aspect of our lives, including through pandemic job loss, illness, and other labor market disruptions. One of the less visible impacts is an increased vulnerability to child and forced labor. As we continue to recover from the pandemic, we should focus our efforts on ensuring workers, parents, and caregivers have access to decent work and adequate social protection programs as a first step in providing the support they need to escape abusive labor conditions.

To increase access to decent work and social protection, we must address inequalities in the world of work. The catastrophic social and economic fallout from the COVID-19 pandemic exacerbated inequalities within and between countries and highlighted the urgent need for action. Reducing inequality and promoting inclusive growth are increasingly important at the international level. (37; 38)

When workers can freely raise their voices and organize, they can defend their rights and advance their interests. Empowered, organized workers can negotiate better wages and working conditions, and this is especially true for women, people of color, and other vulnerable populations. They can advance democratic values and practices in their workplaces, and they are better equipped to participate effectively in democratic political activity. They can demand an end to workplace violence and discrimination. And they can call out corruption, resist authoritarianism, and build vibrant communities, inclusive economies, and democratic societies free of child labor and forced labor.

The following pages provide an overview of global child labor in the year 2021 and detail the meaningful efforts that many countries made, as well as the enormous obstacles that remain before we can achieve a total abolition of child labor, especially in its worst forms. All these efforts are critical as we build back better together in this post-pandemic world.

Overview of 2021 Assessments

This year, of the 131 countries and territories we assessed, nine countries—Argentina, Colombia, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Ecuador, Guatemala, Honduras, Jordan, and Uzbekistan—received the highest assessment of Significant Advancement (see Figure 4 for a global breakdown). These countries made meaningful efforts during the reporting period in all relevant areas covering legal frameworks, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs. In some cases, these efforts included taking suggested actions recommended in our 2020 Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor report. Each of the nine countries met and/or exceeded the baseline of minimally acceptable protections needed to receive ILAB's highest assessment of Significant Advancement. The year 2021 marks the first time that Uzbekistan has achieved an assessment of Significant Advancement, overcoming challenges to undertake meaningful efforts in all relevant areas and addressing longstanding, government-linked labor abuses in the cotton sector. This is the seventh straight year in a row that Argentina and Costa Rica have received a Significant Advancement assessment. This year is also the first year since 2015 that Jordan received a Significant Advancement and the first year since 2017 for Honduras. However, it is important to note that child labor challenges remain in each of these countries. “Significant Advancement” serves as a laudable indicator of a country's efforts against child labor during the reporting period; it is not a sign that the work is over.

It is noteworthy that eight additional countries and territories would have received an assessment of Significant Advancement had they met the baseline level of protection. These include Brazil, Georgia, India, Jamaica, Madagascar, Nepal, the Philippines, and Sri Lanka. For more information about this baseline, see Figure 5.

In total, 73 countries received a Moderate Advancement assessment in 2021. These countries made meaningful efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period in some relevant areas covering laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs. Meanwhile, 15 countries received an assessment of Minimal Advancement for making efforts in only a few relevant areas.

Other countries also made efforts to address their child labor situation during the year; yet because they simultaneously continued or established a detrimental law, policy, or practice that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor, the highest assessment level these countries could receive was a Minimal Advancement. Twenty-two countries—Armenia; Azerbaijan; Cambodia; the Central African Republic; Falkland Islands (Islas Malvinas); Gabon; Iraq; Kazakhstan; Kenya; Kyrgyz Republic; Mali; Mauritania; Moldova; Montserrat; Pakistan; Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha; Somalia; Timor-Leste; Tonga; Ukraine; Yemen; and Zimbabwe—implemented or maintained a law, policy, or practice related to access to education, minimum age for work, labor inspection, impunity for perpetrators, criminal treatment of victims, or the recruitment and use of child soldiers that undermined advancement. Eight of these countries were new to this list in 2021: the Central African Republic; Falkland Islands (Islas Malvinas); Kazakhstan; Kenya; Montserrat; Pakistan; Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha; and Zimbabwe. Four countries were removed from this list: Mongolia, Tanzania, The Gambia, and Uganda. The Central African Republic was added because government security forces recruited children for support roles and coordinated with an armed group that recruited and used children in armed conflict. Supported by a pattern of threats and intimidation of worker organizations and trade unionists, high-level officials within the Government of Zimbabwe and the ruling political party interfered with a delegation representing worker and civil society organizations that was investigating an allegation of child labor occurring at a commercial farm. At least one high-level government official reportedly sent party activists to the farm to threaten and intimidate the delegation. Both countries received an assessment of Moderate Advancement in the 2020 edition of this report.

Five countries received an assessment of No Advancement because they made no effort to prevent the worst forms of child labor: Anguilla, British Virgin Islands, Grenada, Niue, and Tokelau. Despite the lack of evidence of child labor, these countries lack legal frameworks that meet international standards, leaving children without an adequate preventative mechanism. Afghanistan also received a No Advancement because during the reporting period, the government arrested, detained, and prosecuted children for terrorism-related crimes, including some children younger than age 12 who had been forcibly recruited by non-state armed groups. Furthermore, authorities treated as criminals some child trafficking victims, especially those engaged in bacha bazi, which typically entails keeping a male or transgender child for the purpose of sexual gratification or armed conflict. Authorities then housed them in juvenile detention centers and subjected them to torture and other forms of ill treatment rather than referring them to victim support services. Moreover, in August 2021, the Taliban took control of Kabul and declared the establishment of an “Islamic Emirate” throughout the country. From then on, school-age girls in the country were not allowed to attend classes beyond the sixth grade in most provinces, effectively closing the door on girls’ education.

In addition, some countries could not receive an assessment level beyond No Advancement because they had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than isolated incidents. Unfortunately, three countries—Burma, Eritrea, and South Sudan—were found to be complicit in the use of forced child labor during the reporting period, whether for commercial sexual exploitation, public works projects, or forced recruitment in armed conflict. This list is unchanged since last year. See Box 7 to learn more about the rising risks to children in Burma after the military coup in early February 2021.

Children at Risk as Instability Rises After Burmese Military Coup

Children in Burma are at risk of poverty and engaging in armed conflict as the country grapples with a political crisis following a military coup. On February 1, 2021, Burma's military overthrew the country's democratically elected civilian government. Since then, thousands of children are bearing the brunt of the conflict.

At least 150,000 children have been forced to flee their homes. There are also reports that the military regime has killed over 1,400 people, including at least 100 children. Many children have been killed by airstrikes and shelling, particularly in Burma's central regions of Magwe and Sagaing and ethnic areas of Chin States, Karen, and Karenni. Many children are also living outside in the jungle under makeshift shelters. These conditions leave children susceptible to hunger and illness and vulnerable to exploitation.

Notably, the military regime has targeted the country's labor union movement, outlawing 16 labor unions, attacking workers on strike, and arresting many union leaders and members.

The U.S. Department of Labor's international child labor and forced labor reporting highlights more than a dozen goods produced in Burma using child labor, forced labor, and/or forced child labor. Evidence also exists that state-owned enterprises in Burma are significantly involved in industries tied to human trafficking, child and forced labor, and the targeting of labor unions.

The political instability in Burma poses threats not only to the Burmese population but opens up entities and individuals doing business in Burma to risks of participation in corruption, illicit finance, and human rights abuses. In an effort to raise awareness about these risks, the U.S. Department of Labor, in collaboration with the Departments of the Treasury, State, Commerce, Homeland Security, and the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative, released a Burma Business Advisory on January 26, 2022. The Burma Business Advisory details the intersection of business, corruption, illicit finance, and human rights abuses taking place in Burma. This Advisory is one example of the United States' commitment to the people of Burma. The United States will continue to work with partners and allies to restore democracy and cease human rights abuses in Burma.

Currently, only Christmas Island, Cocos (Keeling) Islands, and Wallis and Futuna fall into the category of No Assessment. This assessment is reserved for countries or territories in which the population of children is either non-existent or extremely small, there is no evidence of the worst forms of child labor and the country appears to have an adequate preventive legal and enforcement framework on child labor, or a country is included in the report for the first time or receives a suggested action for the first time.

Overview of Meaningful Efforts

Legal

A number of countries made efforts to ratify key international commitments in support of fundamental principles and rights at work. For example, this year, both Bangladesh and Liberia continued the process toward ratification of ILO Convention 138 on Minimum Age. Bangladesh, Chile, Comoros, and Sierra Leone took steps to either ratify or bring into force the Protocol of 2014 to the 1930 Forced Labor Convention No. 29.

Other countries took similar steps related to ILO and UN instruments as they sought to strengthen their legal frameworks. Fiji ratified the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC) Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict and the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution, and Child Pornography. In addition, the Central African Republic adopted Law 21.003 that authorized the government to ratify ILO Convention No. 190 on Violence and Harassment, which reaffirms the effective abolition of child labor. And Sierra Leone ratified two additional ILO Conventions – No. 143 on Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention and No. 189 Domestic Workers Convention.

Several countries also made efforts to strengthen their legal framework to protect children from hazardous work and promote minimum age protections. Sri Lanka amended its hazardous occupations list, expanding the list of occupations prohibited for children to include domestic labor. The country also amended the Minimum Wage Ordinance to increase the minimum age for work from 14 to 16. Jordan enacted a regulations prohibiting child labor in agriculture under age 16 and hazardous agriculture work under age 18. Mauritania's Ministry of Labor enacted a hazardous work list decree, identifying 44 types of activities prohibited for children. Pakistan's Balochistan Province enacted its Bonded Labor Act, which banned hazardous work for children under age 14. Saint Helena, Ascensión, and Tristán da Cunha passed an employment ordinance setting the minimum employment age at 14. Tunisia's Parliament passed the Domestic Workers Bill, which prohibits the employment of children in domestic work. And Mongolia revised its Labor Law to set the minimum age for work at 15 and the minimum age for light work at 13. To learn more about hazardous work, see

A number of countries took steps to expand legal protections to vulnerable populations. In Bolivia, the government passed a decree giving migrants the ability to normalize their status without paying fees, which will enable more children to enroll in school. Liberia passed amendments to the 2005 Anti-Human Trafficking Law that removed the requirement of force, fraud, or coercion in child sex trafficking cases. Pakistan passed a bill that prohibits corporal punishment of children in the Islamabad Capital Territory. Togo adopted a new labor code that strengthened enforcement and penalty mechanisms. Finally, Uzbekistan amended the country's Criminal Code to assign criminal penalties for the use of children ages 16 to 17 in commercial sex. This amendment brings the country into compliance with international standards with respect to prohibitions against the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

Enforcement

As much of the world continued to increase online activities, several countries took innovative steps to address online and digital crime. Bangladesh took direct enforcement action to combat online crime networks as the Bangladeshi police arrested seven members of a sex-trafficking ring that used social media apps to entice young girls with promises and then trafficked them to neighboring countries. In Mauritius, the country's Office of the Ombudsperson for Children disseminated over 60,000 brochures to sensitize the public against online commercial sexual exploitation. Moldova also took steps to combat online commercial sexual exploitation of children, including trainings for enforcement agency personnel, along with obtaining new equipment to investigate cybercrime for those agencies, and publishing guides on protecting children from online sexual abuse and exploitation. As the global pandemic continued to drive online solutions,

What is Hazardous Child Labor?

ILO Recommendation 190<sup>1</sup> calls on governments to consider the following when determining work that is prohibited for children.

Morocco launched a new labor inspectorate IT management system that enabled remote training for inspectors in compliance with pandemic precautions. In Chile, the country's Inter-Agency Task Force on Trafficking in Persons organized a webinar training focused on prevention, investigation, and best practices for victims' assistance on the topic of trafficking in persons, reaching 200 civil servants. Finally, Jordan's Ministry of Labor launched a new website to accept submissions of labor complaints, www.hemayah.jo, which includes a dedicated channel for child labor.

Actions depend on data. To support those actions, a number of countries advanced their data efforts; most of these countries are in Africa. In Mauritania, labor inspectors reported carrying out 570 inspections. This is the first time Mauritania has provided data on the number of inspections for this report. Burundi developed its first-ever data collection system for human trafficking cases and trained prosecutors and judges on how to use the system. And elsewhere on the continent, the Ministry of Labor of Senegal organized a workshop for labor inspectors on data collection in the informal economy.

Labor inspectorates often face tight budgets. Yet, this year, several countries sought to increase their number of labor inspectors as well as raise funding levels. The Dominican Republic reported that it has hired 23 new technicians specialized in child labor for the Directorate of Policies for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor. These specialized technicians are working in the interior of the country, an often underserved area. Zambia increased its number of labor inspectors from 160 to 240, while Morocco increased labor inspectors by over 43 percent. Belize increased its number of inspections from 301 to 584 and Ghana increased its from 213 to 749. Côte d'Ivoire's government reports having increased the annual budget of the Anti-Child Trafficking and Juvenile Delinquency Division Unit—from $10,000 in 2018 to $200,000 in 2021. Ethiopia substantially increased the budget of its labor inspectorate—from approximately $150,000 in 2020 to more than $2.5 million in 2021. In addition, Rwanda again significantly increased its number of labor inspections over the previous year and ensured that inspectors received adequate vehicle and transportation allowances, despite pandemic-related budget cuts.

Minimum Age for Hazardous Work

Prosecution and effective sanctions remain a cornerstone of enforcement. Guatemala successfully prosecuted and convicted 38 individuals for crimes related to the worst forms of child labor. Notably, the Central African Republic prosecuted and convicted a child trafficker, which was its first-ever trafficking in persons conviction. And Gabon's Ministry of Justice convicted six individuals on trafficking-related charges.

There were other positive developments to advance efforts against child labor in 2021. Ecuador signed a framework agreement with Peru to strengthen judicial cooperation on trafficking in persons crimes and other issues. In Kiribati, the government conducted its first child labor inspection in the capital and most populous island, Tarawa. Georgia also created a new mobile group in Adjara to identify and assist children living and working on the streets, especially those engaged in begging. See Figure 8 for an overview of global enforcement efforts.

Coordination

With a large number of enforcement efforts underway, vibrant and robust coordination at the government level, in tandem with civil society, is essential. For example, Argentina launched its Action Plan for the Businesses Against Child Labor Network, an effort to improve government cooperation with the private sector in preventing and eradicating child labor. As an example of cross-country cooperation in the region, Ecuador's Ministry of Labor and Ministry of Economic and Social Inclusion worked with their Colombian counterparts to establish mechanisms to address child labor in the illegal mining sector along the Ecuador-Colombia border. Across that border, Colombia's Ministry of Interior created a committee to initiate and coordinate victim assistance among local trafficking committees, state entities, including the Judicial Police, NGOs, and the Colombian Institute for Family Well-Being.

In the Indo-Pacific region, several countries took steps to develop new coordination bodies. For example, the Philippines opened its first Cyber-Trafficking in Persons Monitoring Center. Maldives established a new Anti-Trafficking in Persons Office at the Ministry of Defense to implement the National Anti-Human Trafficking Action Plan and undertake prevention efforts. Farther east, in June 2021, Timor-Leste established its Commission to Combat Trafficking in Persons, and the Commission convened its first meeting in November.

Global Enforcement Efforts*

*Out of 131 countries

Countries in the Middle East and North Africa region also undertook meaningful coordination efforts. Tunisia's National Authority to Combat Trafficking launched a national referral mechanism to “identify and refer victims to care services.” Jordan formed an interagency committee to update its National Strategy to Combat Child Labor.

Albania established the Ministry of State for Youth and Children to further governmental efforts to promote the healthy development and well-being of children. In nearby North Macedonia, the National Trafficking in Persons Commission prepared a 2021–2022 plan to prevent human trafficking of at-risk minors, improve victim identification processes, and promote efforts to reduce forced child begging.

Finally, several Sub-Saharan African countries established new coordinating bodies to address human rights abuses. Togo created a National Commission Against Trafficking in Persons, and Niger formed the National Steering Committee to Combat Child and Forced Labor. Lesotho launched national referral mechanisms for trafficking in persons and standard operating procedures in October. Last, Chad created a Multisectoral Technical Committee Against Migrant Smuggling and Human Trafficking.

Policy

A number of countries established or implemented policies to help focus attention and resources to combat child labor. Brazil drastically revised its Federal Pact for the Eradication of Forced Labor. Led by the Ministry of Justice's Special Secretariat for Human Rights and currently signed by 23 of the 27 states in Brazil, the Pact was revised this year to allow the inclusion of all 5,000 municipalities throughout the country. This revision aims to promote and improve communication between entities involved in addressing slave labor. Ecuador, under its National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons, held trainings on trafficking victim identification, prosecution, and victim assistance for labor inspectors, prosecutors, and police officers, among others. Guatemala signed a cooperation agreement with the governments of El Salvador and Honduras to strengthen actions and efforts against trafficking in persons. And Honduras's National Commission for the Gradual and Progressive Eradication of Child Labor approved the 2021–2025 Roadmap for the Elimination of Child Labor. This Roadmap seeks to identify risk factors for vulnerability to child labor, raise awareness of child labor laws, and establish an integrated protocol for responding to child labor violations.

In the Indo-Pacific region, Bangladesh approved the country's eighth 5-year plan titled, “Promoting Prosperity and Fostering Inclusiveness.” The plan includes provisions and a budget to eliminate child labor and child abuse and sets out actions to enforce and harmonize laws against trafficking and exploitation. Mongolia created a multidisciplinary taskforce representing 18 government and non-government organizations to implement victim-centered, collaborative, and sustainable approaches to identifying trafficking victims, especially child trafficking victims.

In the Middle East and North Africa region, Oman adopted a new Trafficking in Persons National Action Plan for 2021–2023. In an effort to drive collaborative change on the ground, Morocco also signed eight partnership agreements with local NGOs in multiple regions of the country to counter child labor.

In the Europe and Eurasia region, Serbia collaborated with the Council of Europe to revise the country's list of indicators used to identify children who are potential victims of trafficking. In Montenegro, a new Strategy for the Social Inclusion of Roma and Egyptians (2021–2025) was passed. Azerbaijan launched its National Early Childhood Development Program as part of the wider Strategy on Children of the Republic of Azerbaijan. The program aims in part to increase the capacity of children's services professionals, in addition to raising awareness around the health and education of children in four target regions: Absheron, Aghjabadi, Ganja, and Shirvan.

In Sub-Saharan Africa, Cabo Verde put in place a new policy on the commercial sexual exploitation of children. In southern Africa, the Government of the Kingdom of Eswatini launched a National Action Plan on the Elimination of Child Labor and created an interagency task force to oversee its implementation. Mozambique launched a 10-year strategic plan with the aim of ensuring the continuity of safe, quality education during and after emergency situations, focusing on the need for strong interventions to protect children and the harmful effects of child labor. As part of Uganda's National Social Protection Policy, the government launched a digital platform to consolidate information from all social protection and security programs in the country to improve program coordination.

Like many global actors, the U.S. is committed to ensuring that our work aligns with broader action at the international level similar to many of the examples mentioned in this section. In fact, since 2015, all 193 UN member states have stood in unity with the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs)—a roadmap of 17 interconnected goals for ending poverty, protecting the environment, and promoting peaceful, inclusive, and just societies by 2030. In particular, under SDG 8 on Decent Work and Economic Growth, Target 8.7 calls on governments to “take immediate and effective measures to eradicate forced labor, end modern slavery and human trafficking and secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labor, including recruitment and use of child soldiers, and by 2025 end child labor in all its forms.” Alliance 8.7 is a global partnership that provides strategic coordination of diverse stakeholders to achieve Target 8.7. Since 2017, ILAB has actively contributed to the work of Alliance 8.7. See Box 8 to learn more about ILAB’s work with Alliance 8.7 and the SDGs. Coordinating global policy work is an essential first step to addressing long-standing child labor concerns because child labor is not just a localized challenge, but one that necessitates global, coordinated action.

Alliance 8.7 and the Path to Achieving the Sustainable Development Goals by 2030

In 2015, the United Nations member states adopted the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development, which provides a blueprint for achieving a better and more sustainable future for people and the planet through 17 interlinked Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). (39; 40) These SDGs recognize that the global challenges we face, including poverty, inequality, climate change, conflict, and humanitarian crises, are interconnected and require joint global strategies and action to achieve shared peace and prosperity for all. Each SDG has targets and indicators to measure progress toward achieving the goals by 2030. Sustainable Development Goal 8 promotes "inclusive and sustainable economic growth, employment, and decent work for all," and Target 8.7 of this goal calls for "immediate and effective measures" to eradicate forced labor, modern slavery, human trafficking, and child labor in all its forms. (41)

Given the urgency of the problem, with over 160 million child laborers and 40 million people in forced labor or modern slavery globally, a global partnership, known as Alliance 8.7, was formed to catalyze action on Target 8.7 by supporting collaboration, sharing knowledge, fostering innovation, and harnessing new technologies to put an end to unacceptable violations of labor and human rights. (42) With support from the International Labor Organization, Alliance 8.7 brought together a diverse set of partners from government, international and regional organizations, workers' and employer organizations, civil society, academia, and other relevant stakeholders, committed to putting an end to child labor, forced labor, and modern slavery. The Alliance also includes 26 Pathfinder countries that have pledged to accelerate efforts and lead the way to achieving Target 8.7 by translating public commitments into concrete actions and developing and adopting the necessary national frameworks to eliminate child labor and forced labor. (43) These 26 Pathfinders represent various regions of the world, demonstrating a truly global commitment to reaching Target 8.7.

As a long-standing leader in the fight to end child labor and forced labor and promote decent work for all, ILAB has supported Alliance 8.7 since its beginning. Although the most recent global estimates on child labor and forced labor have shown us that the path to reaching Target 8.7 will not be an easy one, the United States remains committed to this goal. (16) The United States is committed to a sustainable, global economic system which respects the rights and dignity of all human beings in line with the Sustainable Development Goals. We cannot allow unscrupulous actors to profit from the labor of children and exploited workers. Instead, we must set our sights on realizing decent work for all adults and a sustainable future for all.

Programs

In Argentina, the Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security published the results of a study, conducted in collaboration with the ILO and UNICEF, measuring the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on children in the country. The study found that 46 percent of children between the ages of 13 and 17 and engaged in work began doing so as a result of the pandemic. Of those that began working during the pandemic, 7 out of 10 resided in households that had experienced job loss or a reduction in working hours. Overall, the study found that the rate of working children ages 13 to 17 had increased as a result of the pandemic, from 17 percent in November 2020 to 23 percent in October 2021. Costa Rica's National Statistics Institute published the 2021

National Household Survey, which included data on children between the ages of 12 and 17. The study found that 1.3 percent of children within this age group were working. The last comprehensive child labor study in Costa Rica that included all relevant age ranges was conducted in 2016. Guyana added $250,000 to its national budget to fund a shelter for survivors of domestic violence and human trafficking, including children. In addition, the Embrace Program in Paraguay approved a new operations manual providing consistent operational guidance for coordinators at program centers across the country. The program also continued to offer trainings on income generation, financial literacy, and entrepreneurship for children engaged in exploitative work and their families, while also referring victims and survivors of child labor and trafficking to the appropriate government programs.

Sri Lanka's National Steering Committee on Child Labor conducted 107 trainings for the fisheries sector and 27 programs for the plantation sector. Pakistan's Punjab Labor Department established an online portal to allow people to file labor-related complaints against government or local officials, including child labor complaints. India's Childline fielded 5 million calls and assisted 39 million children, including children who are survivors of child labor. In Kiribati, the Ministry of Employment and Human Resources funded a pilot child labor inspection program that directly sought to collect data on the nature of child labor in Kiribati. The Ministry made 35 site visits in South Tarawa, Kiribati's most populated and urban area. In Box 9, learn more about ILAB's work in Malaysia, in particular our new projects and tools to address ongoing labor issues in key sectors in collaboration with the government.

In the Middle East and North Africa, Tunisia opened a new location as part of its Second Chance program, which reintegrates school dropouts ages 12 to 18 back into the educational system or provides them with vocational training. This is part of the first phase of a social program designed to meet the needs of over 1,000 dropout students in Tunisia. Jordan established a program to address child labor in the agriculture sector.

In the Europe and Eurasia region, Kazakhstan made shelter services available to non-citizens. According to government data, Uzbekistan provided legal, financial, and social assistance to 323,620 labor migrants overseas, as well as entrepreneurship and/or vocational training to 23,878 returned labor migrants.

In Sub-Saharan Africa, Benin's government continued its Administrative Census for Population Identification program to identify and register citizens lacking identity documents. In Togo, the government expanded its cash transfer program into the Savanes region, where over 244,000 additional people received transfers. The program makes direct cash transfers of roughly $20/month through mobile phones to Togo's poorest citizens in order to mitigate the worst effects of the pandemic. The government also created an online application for birth certificates to help facilitate documentation, and with that documentation better and easier access to essential social services. Finally, in an effort to increase funds for social programs, Namibia allocated $408,910 to shelters, a substantial increase from $22,150 allocated last year.

These examples are just a snapshot of the more than 555 meaningful efforts undertaken by countries cataloged in this year's report.

Value of Effective Programs: Measures to Combat Child Labor and Forced Labor in Malaysia

Malaysia has always been a willing partner to ILAB, particularly in the area of technical assistance projects that support local stakeholders in efforts to combat child labor and forced labor and promote decent working conditions. ILAB is currently funding projects that advance labor law reform, increase migrant worker protections, promote acceptable conditions of work, and reduce the risks of child labor and forced labor, particularly in Malaysian palm oil supply chains.

The MY Voice project, for example, combats forced labor and child labor in the garment and palm oil industries in Malaysia. The project helps elevate workers' voices in these industries through a number of strategies, including incorporating worker perspectives into company risk assessments, policies, and compliance monitoring, with the goal of improving Malaysian suppliers' compliance with labor standards. (44)

ILAB also recently launched the Global Accelerator Lab 8.7 project, which will address child labor and forced labor at the global, regional, and country levels through innovative solutions to improve due diligence and transparency in supply chains, strengthen workers' voice, and increase access to social protections. This project will work at the country level with Malaysia, among other nations, to implement innovative measures to reduce child labor and forced labor. (45)

Despite progress and cooperation through technical assistance in Malaysia, our reporting shows there is more work to be done on child and forced labor in the country. Our List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor indicates that disposable gloves and palm oil made in Malaysia are produced by forced labor in violation of international standards. (34) In addition, U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) issues withhold release orders (WROs) when there is "reasonable suspicion" that forced labor was used in the production of goods being imported into the United States, and there are several WROs against Malaysian entities on disposable gloves, palm oil, and palm oil products. (46) This enforcement mechanism directs U.S. ports of entry to detain shipments from these identified entities, and importers are responsible for proving to U.S. CBP that the goods were not made with forced labor. (47)

Alongside increasing awareness of goods made with exploitative and abusive labor conditions, ILAB's tools can be another asset for addressing child labor and forced labor in Malaysia. ILAB's Comply Chain app serves as a resource for companies and industry groups seeking to develop robust social compliance systems for their global production. Comply Chain is now available in Malay, making the mobile tool accessible across Southeast Asia. The tool provides a practical, step-by-step guidance for companies working to reduce child labor and forced labor in supply chains. Companies are encouraged to work through the various modules to improve elements of their systems and their work with supply chain partners. The government and the private sector can use this resource to take action to address child labor and forced labor in Malaysia and in other Southeast Asian countries where Malay is spoken.

Overview of Major Gaps

As demonstrated by the reversals in progress toward eliminating child labor over the past 2 years, poverty is the main driver of child labor. When children engage in child labor, they sacrifice their education, well-being, and development, which limits their future opportunities. Today, children remain vulnerable to dangerous work in the back-breaking process of brickmaking; repeated exposure to hazardous chemicals and risky conditions in mining; and horrific abuse through commercial sexual exploitation due to gaps in legislation, enforcement, coordination mechanisms, policies, and programs. The gaps highlighted in this year's report underscore that there is still much work to be done.

Legal

Comprehensive legal frameworks are critical to ensuring children are protected from child labor, including its worst forms. However, this year's report found many gaps in this area, with 514 corresponding suggested actions. See Figure 9: Global Gaps in Laws and Regulations.

Twenty-two countries and territories, including Angola, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Guinea, Haiti, and Pakistan, among others, have labor laws that do not fully cover children working in the informal sector, where a significant share of child labor is known to occur. This leaves children unprotected from poor labor practices that countries' own labor laws aim to address in the formal sector. In Guinea, for example, during the COVID-19 pandemic, more children and families moved to gold mining regions and a rising number of children engaged in informal child labor in the gold and diamond mining sectors, where they were subjected to frequent collapses of open pit mines and the use of toxic chemicals.

Education is also key to children's well-being as well as their future employment prospects; however, laws guaranteeing free public education for children were insufficient in a number of countries. In Jamaica, for example, free access to education is limited to children with Jamaican citizenship, leaving children without citizenship vulnerable to child labor. In many countries, including Armenia, Bolivia, the Central African Republic, and Thailand, the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, which may encourage children to drop out of school before completing their compulsory education.

Gaps in legal measures related to hazardous work remained prominent, with 30 countries lacking comprehensive protections, including limitations in their scope and sectors covered. For example, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children in Ethiopia do not include traditional weaving, a sector in which there is evidence that children operate dangerous machinery, equipment, and tools, as well as work in forced or indentured conditions (see the List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor and List of Products Produced by Forced or Indentured Child Labor).

Criminal laws also remained insufficient in countries across all regions. Laws criminalizing slavery and practices similar to slavery or debt bondage and forced or compulsory labor were lacking in over 20 countries, including Afghanistan, Angola, and Zimbabwe. Furthermore, trafficking in persons laws lacked full coverage in some countries. For example, in Dominica and some states in Nigeria, trafficking in persons laws do not apply to domestic trafficking.

Serious gaps in criminalizing the worst forms of child labor remained widespread during the reporting period. For instance, insufficient legal protections against the use, procurement, and offering of children for prostitution, production of pornography, and pornographic performances were identified in all regions, with 35 countries failing to meet international standards on the prevention of commercial sexual exploitation of children. Existing legislation in many countries, such as Albania,

Papua New Guinea, and Yemen, does not specifically include prohibitions against the use of children in pornography or pornographic performances, an area where there was a significant increase in online traffic during the global pandemic. In Tonga, legislation prohibiting the procurement of children for commercial sexual exploitation only includes girls and not boys, who are also vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation. In addition, many countries, including Azerbaijan, Guinea-Bissau, Tokelau, and Ukraine, fail to criminalize the use of children for prostitution, leave those who exploit children in prostitution by patronizing them without criminal consequences.

Many countries also lacked prohibitions against the use of children in non-state armed groups, leaving children susceptible to recruitment and participation in armed conflict. In some cases, governments even enabled children's participation in armed conflicts. For example, the Governments of Pakistan and Mali actively supported non-state militant groups that recruited and used children. Even worse, in the Central African Republic, the government itself recruited and used child soldiers in armed conflict.

Enforcement

Even when child labor laws are in place, poor enforcement enables child labor to continue. Gaps related to enforcement make up the single largest area for suggested action in this year's report, accounting for more than 37 percent of all suggested actions.

Labor inspectorates are primarily responsible for implementing countries' labor laws; however, nearly 50 percent of countries had an insufficient number of labor inspectors. Furthermore, even with dedicated public servants, many labor inspectorates lacked proper funding, training, and resources to address child labor. Inspectorate resource constraints, such as insufficient fuel and transport, can result in a lack of inspections in areas where child labor is known to occur, including in rural or remote areas, agricultural fields, and mines. In Suriname, for example, inspectors did not conduct any inspections in the artisanal gold mining sector where children engage in dangerous working conditions involving hazardous tools, heavy loads, and exposure to cyanide and mercury. ## Hazards of Child Domestic Work: The Need for Legal Actions Around the World

Child domestic work refers to children's work in the household of a third-party employer. (48)

While child domestic work is prevalent globally, it is difficult to accurately measure due to the informal and private working relationship between household owners and child workers. According to the ILO, approximately 7.1 million children between the ages of 5 to 17 are engaged in domestic work, with girls representing over half of that estimate. (16)

While most household chores may seem harmless to adults, they can be physically and mentally damaging to children. Approximately 25 percent of children engaged in domestic service are performing hazardous work, which includes working long hours, using dangerous equipment, and carrying out tasks in awkward positions that can be harmful to children. (48; 49) In many cases, hazardous domestic work can even be life-threatening, especially when it involves physical and sexual abuse.

In Pakistan, for example, police have arrested employers in multiple instances for torturing and murdering child domestic workers. (50) Reports of physical and sexual violence, torture, and the death of child domestic workers have emerged from other countries around the world, including in India, Bangladesh, and Indonesia, to name a few. (51; 52; 53) In 2021, there were 28 reported cases of torture among child domestic workers in Bangladesh. (54) However, cases of abuse are likely underreported.

Some countries like Pakistan and Bangladesh have taken action to prohibit the use of children in domestic work. In 2019, Pakistan's Ministry of Human Rights declared domestic child labor to be hazardous within the Islamabad Capital Territory. Similarly, in 2021, the Ministry of Labor in Bangladesh developed a proposal to update its list of hazardous work to include child domestic service. Inclusion of occupations on the hazardous list helps countries develop legal frameworks to protect children working in the most dangerous occupations, such as mining, auto shops, and domestic labor.

Still, countries can and should do more. To recognize the perils associated with child domestic service, countries must declare child domestic work as hazardous and include child domestic service on their national hazardous work lists. With child labor growing exponentially due to the COVID-19 pandemic, millions of children may be at risk of abusive working conditions behind closed doors. (55)

In addition to resource limitations, in some countries, penalties for child labor remain insufficient or non-existent. For example, the fine assessed for instances of child labor in Belize is merely $12.50. In 19 countries, including Lebanon, Malawi, and Samoa, there are inadequate mechanisms to assess civil penalties for child labor law violations, enabling violators of child labor laws to face minimal repercussions.

Unfortunately, in Anguilla; Azerbaijan; Falkland Islands; Gabon; Saint Helena, Ascension, and Tristan da Cunha; Somalia; South Sudan; Tonga; and Yemen, research indicates that no labor inspections were conducted at all in the reporting period, leaving children at serious risk of child labor. Moreover, in some cases, as seen in Azerbaijan, Benin, the Kyrgyz Republic, Moldova, and Ukraine, inspections were actively hindered or prevented by the government.

For example, during the reporting period, the Government of Azerbaijan extended a moratorium put in place in 2017 that prevents all labor inspections from occurring.

This year, 10 countries—Bangladesh, Cambodia, Chad, Eritrea, Iraq, Madagascar, Pakistan, the Philippines, South Sudan, and Yemen—failed to investigate, prosecute, convict, and sentence public officials who participated in or facilitated the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation of children and debt-based forced labor. During the reporting period, judges in Cambodia were reported to have accepted bribes in return for the dismissal of charges, acquittal, and reduced sentencing of individuals committing such crimes, especially for those individuals with possible ties to the government. In Madagascar, the government failed to investigate reports of officials accepting bribes to produce and issue false identity documents to facilitate the commercial sexual exploitation of minors.

Coordination

Effective coordination of efforts to address child labor enables government departments and ministries to carry out their mandates to enforce laws, implement national policies and programs, and support survivors in receiving social services. However, this year's report includes suggested actions to improve coordination efforts in 101 of 131 countries.

The most common finding, identified across all regions, was that coordinating bodies—or mechanisms such as intergovernmental committees responsible for coordinating efforts to combat child labor—were unable to fully carry out their mandates. This was largely due to insufficient funding, which prevented coordinating bodies from being able to meaningfully operate or implement activities. Other issues identified included lack of capacity, inadequate staffing, and limited data to inform decision-making. For example, in Cameroon, agencies engaged in addressing child labor did not provide full reports to the Interministerial Committee on Trafficking in

Agencies in Albania, Argentina, Botswana, Costa Rica, and Guatemala also lacked effective coordination between institutions responsible for investigating the worst forms of child labor and those providing social services to victims, especially in the informal sector. Moreover, while many coordinating bodies faced challenges in effectively operating or failed to make updates on their activities publicly available. Eritrea, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, and Tonga had no active national coordinating mechanisms to address child labor.

Policy

Policies to address child labor support governments in developing and prioritizing a roadmap to ensure that children are free from child labor, including work that harms their health, safety, and morals. This is particularly important because many children engaged in child labor are working outside the protection of the law and remain vulnerable to poor working conditions and serious occupational safety and health risks, among other concerns.

This year's report identified several gaps in how child labor policies were prioritized and communicated to other stakeholders, including other government entities, civil society, businesses, and workers' organizations. The majority of policy gaps related to a lack of publicly available information on the status of policy implementation. This suggests that policies were not widely implemented or were inactive. For example, our research was unable to determine whether any activities were undertaken to implement Comoros' National Policy for the Protection of Children. Likewise, no updates were available within the reporting period on Serbia's Roadmap for Eliminating Abuse of Child Labor.

Additional gaps were identified in the scope of existing policies. For instance, although the Government of Mauritius had policies related to the education and health of children, research could not identify any policies designed to address the worst forms of child labor, such as commercial sexual exploitation. In Yemen, research found no evidence of a government policy on the worst forms of child labor outside of child soldiering. Seventeen countries, including Algeria, Bhutan, Djibouti, Eswatini, Saint Lucia, and Senegal, had no policies to address child labor.

Programs

Social programs can help address child labor by countering factors that both lead to and reinforce systems of poverty, which prevent children from pursuing their education and instead thrust them into work at the expense of their futures. These factors often include, but are not restricted to, limited access to quality education, social protection, and decent work opportunities. Figure 10 presents a global picture and regional analysis of government efforts and challenges.

Despite the importance of social programs in preventing child labor, social programs were insufficient in many countries across all regions. For example, even though primary education may be free in most countries, indirect costs, such as the cost of books and uniforms, may hinder many students from continuing their education, including in Cambodia, Nigeria, the Philippines, and Togo. Teacher shortages, lack of sanitation facilities, and the combination of long distances and unreliable transportation between students' homes and schools were also common issues found among all regions, but particularly in Latin America, the Caribbean, and Africa. Children with disabilities, LGBTQI+ youth, girls, and those from indigenous or refugee communities also continued to experience discrimination and other barriers to accessing education. In Albania, children from Roma and Balkan-Egyptian families, as well as refugees, encountered discrimination in schools and were placed in separate classrooms. These children also faced difficulties in accessing social services due to challenges with presenting birth certificates. In addition, in Costa Rica, children in rural areas, girls, LGBTQI+ youth, and children from indigenous and Afro-descendant communities faced challenges in accessing education due to discrimination.

Adequate social services for human trafficking survivors, including shelters and specialized services, were limited in many countries. For example, Nicaragua lacked shelters and services for male trafficking survivors and survivors with disabilities. In Maldives, shelters did not have sufficient funding, human resources, or staff training. Furthermore, in India, sexual abuse in shelters was reported, with 40 percent of shelters lacking internal mechanisms, such as staff training and reporting infrastructure, to protect children in their care from physical and sexual abuse.

Accurate data on the prevalence and types of child labor is essential to designing programs that effectively address child labor. However, many countries lack reliable data on child labor or have data that is outdated, non-existent, or not publicly available. These countries include Armenia, Azerbaijan, Burma, Burundi, Comoros, Fiji, India, Indonesia, Kazakhstan, Lebanon, and Liberia. The lack of quality data prevents stakeholders from adequately addressing the needs and challenges faced by children at risk of child labor.

These gaps in existing social programs, alongside countries where social programs were non-existent, such as the British Virgin Islands, the Central African Republic, Djibouti, Guinea, Solomon Islands, and Western Sahara, mean that the factors that drive children to work at the expense of their futures remain unaddressed.

Call to Action

The alarming reversal in progress in addressing child labor in recent years—with child labor rising to 160 million worldwide in the latest estimates—underscores that progress on this ambitious and essential goal is not guaranteed. (16) Now more than ever in the face of this reversal, stakeholders across government, civil society, the private sector, and workers’ and employers’ organizations must work together to comprehensively eliminate child labor so that all children can reach their full potential.

This report highlights that while many countries continue to make significant efforts to improve outcomes for children, serious gaps remain in eliminating child labor, including its worst forms. The suggested actions that correspond with the gaps identified throughout this report aim to provide policymakers with a roadmap for action. But these recommendations are not just for policymakers, but also for companies, donors, human rights organizations, investors, and others who seek to encourage action against child labor by leveraging the influence they have. Together with stakeholders from around the globe, ILAB is working to achieve a world in which decent work, education, and social protection are a reality for all. We are doing this by publishing international reports on child labor and forced labor; designing tools such as the Better Trade Tool, which matches ILAB’s essential reporting with U.S. import trade data, and Comply Chain, which provides a practical, step-by-step guide on critical elements of social compliance; and funding technical assistance and cooperation projects. Through these actions, as well as through our partnerships with various stakeholders, we are working toward a future in which no child will sweat and toil in dangerous mines and sweltering fields but can instead pursue a life of opportunity free from the harms of child labor.

“Together, we can build a world where children are free to learn and achieve their potential. This is what we owe them. And this is our greatest hope for a better tomorrow.”

109th International Labor Conference July 11, 2021

From the start of 2021, the United States began a powerful worker-centered recovery from the economic shocks of the COVID-19 pandemic. The U.S. economy has created more than 9 million jobs since President Biden took office, and the U.S. has more than fully recovered from pandemic-era job losses. (56) In 2021 alone, the unemployment rate in the U.S. saw its greatest drop since World War II. (57) Record job growth in the leisure and hospitality, manufacturing, transportation, and warehouse sectors has contributed to an unprecedented moment of worker empowerment and engagement. The historic economic recovery under the Biden-Harris Administration has begun to transition into steady, stable growth that continues to provide widespread opportunity to America’s workers and a safety net for children in the United States.

The U.S. Department of Labor has remained focused on empowering all workers to seize opportunities in a growing economy by working to improve job quality and job access across the country. Through our Good Jobs Initiative, we are creating good, union and middle-class jobs and fair working conditions for all Americans, including underserved populations, youth, people of color, veterans, and people with disabilities. We are also investing in job training and apprenticeship programs that both increase wages for working families and strengthen our supply chains. In addition, U.S. Department of Labor agencies collaboratively ensure that American workers of all ages enjoy safe and dignified work, key to preventing families from resorting to child labor.

The Wage and Hour Division enforces regulations on legal working age, permissible hours of work, earned wages, and hazardous occupation prohibitions for minor employees. Wage and Hour investigators across the country conduct inspections at workplaces to ensure that labor laws are enforced and working conditions are fair. Many investigations take place in industries that employ workers vulnerable to labor trafficking. As a result, the Wage and Hour Division is often the first federal agency to identify cases of trafficking in persons and refer these cases to criminal law enforcement agencies. Through its YouthRules! initiative, the Wage and Hour Division also provides information to young workers, parents, educators, and employers to safeguard the rights of workers under the age of 18 and help ensure that their work experiences are legal, safe, and do not disrupt their education. The Occupational Safety and Health Administration ensures safe and healthy working conditions by setting standards to reduce and eliminate workplace hazards. Finally, the Bureau of Labor Statistics measures labor market activity, working conditions, price changes, and production in the U.S. economy to support private and public decision making. The Bureau of Labor Statistics also conducts research and publishes reports on youth employment trends.

The Federal Minimum Ages for Work

The Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) guarantees basic rights and protections to ensure the safety and well-being of child workers. The child labor regulations of the FLSA are designed to ensure children's educational opportunities are not harmed by early employment and to prohibit children's employment in jobs that are detrimental to their health and safety. The FLSA includes restrictions on the maximum number of hours children can work when school is and is not in session, the times of day children can work, and types of work children under the age of 16 may legally perform.

The FLSA and its implementing regulations have established the following standards:

- A minimum age of 14 for most employment in non-hazardous, non-agricultural industries, and limits on the times of day, number of hours, and tasks that can be performed by 14- and 15-year-olds.

Department of Labor, Alyson Fligg

U.S. Secretary of Labor Marty Walsh visits the Latin American Youth Center Career Academy (LAYCCA) in Washington, DC. October 14, 2021.

- A minimum age of 18 for employment in hazardous occupations as deemed by the Department's issuance of 17 non-agricultural Hazardous Occupations Orders.
- Exceptions for agricultural and non-agricultural employment. For example, the FLSA does not restrict the work that 16- and 17- year-olds may perform in agricultural employment, and it permits youth under the age of 14 to work in non-hazardous agricultural employment outside school hours with parental approval.

All states have child labor standards and mandatory school attendance laws. When state and federal child labor standards differ, the rule that provides the most protections for the young worker is the one that must be followed.

"The Fair Labor Standards Act's youth employment regulations exist to ensure youths' jobs and work hours do not jeopardize their safety, well-being, or educational opportunities...Employers can prevent violations from occurring in the first place if they know, understand, and comply with the FLSA's child labor, wage, and recordkeeping requirements." ### Fiscal Year 2021 Enforcement Data

Number of Minors Employed in Violation of Hazardous Occupations Orders: 545

Total Penalties Imposed for Child Labor Violations: $3 million in civil money penalties

There were 2,080,000 youth, ages 16 to 17, employed in the United States in 2020, and 2,243,000 employed in 2021. Despite the restrictions and limitations placed on youth work, in 2021, the most recent year for which data are available, there were two fatal occupational injuries in the United States among youth ages 16 to 17, and one fatal occupational injury among youth below the age of 16.

Wage and Hour Division

The Wage and Hour Division (WHD) determines an employer's status of compliance with the FLSA's child labor regulations in every investigation conducted. In FY 2021, WHD found child labor violations in 747 cases. In 208 of these cases, violations of hazardous occupations orders were specifically identified. In total, the WHD found 2,189 minors employed in violation of the FLSA's child labor requirements, with nearly 545 of them employed in violation of hazardous occupation orders (see Figure 11).

In Clarksburg, Tennessee, WHD found that Clarksburg Supermarket violated hazardous child labor requirements of the FLSA by allowing minors under the age of 18 to operate power-driven meat processing machines. WHD assessed a $65,289 penalty under the Child Labor Enhancement Penalty Program. In New Hampshire, the owners of LaBelle Winery and Americus LaBelle Winery paid $22,803 in civil penalties for violating the FLSA by allowing 33 employees under the age of 16 to work more hours than allowed by law. And in San Diego, a McDonald's franchisee agreed to pay $25,920 in civil penalties after a WHD investigation found that three of their franchises employed minors in hazardous work. The franchise owners also agreed to ensure additional training and oversight for managers and employers at their 10 locations to prevent future FLSA violations. (58; 63; 119)

In addition to its rigorous enforcement efforts, WHD aims to prevent violations from occurring in the first place by educating employers, workers, and the public about federal child labor law compliance. In response to an increase in violations of child labor laws in the food services industry, in February 2022, WHD hosted trainings on federal laws governing youth employment for restaurant employers, minor age workers and their parents, school representatives, and other interested stakeholders. WHD's YouthRules! website provides compliance toolkits and answers to a range of questions. WHD online resources make available to contracting agencies, contractors, unions, workers, and others Fact Sheets, FAQs, on-demand video training, Power Point Presentations, and extensive information on all laws enforced by the agency, including information about regularly scheduled seminars on prevailing wage requirements, to ensure that federal dollars support good jobs and dignified work. (59)

The agency also recently launched a free Timesheet App for Android mobile device users that allows employers and employees to track their hours of work and calculate wages due. The app can empower young workers to ensure they are receiving the wages they are due or get assistance if a dispute arises.

In March 2022, during National Farmworkers Awareness Week, WHD hosted a 3-day virtual seminar, "Nourishing Equity and Cultivating Compliance," for agricultural workers and stakeholders. The seminar addressed key agency priorities including child labor, equity, retaliation, and human trafficking in the agricultural sector, and covered several laws enforced by WHD, including the Migrant and Seasonal Worker Protection Act, the agricultural and child labor provisions of the FLSA, and regulations affecting workers employed under the H2A visa program. WHD investigators recently played a crucial role in Operation Blooming Onion, a multiagency investigation of H-2A visa fraud, forced labor, and human trafficking of agricultural workers on farms in southern Georgia (see Box 11 for more information). The investigation exposed the horrors of human trafficking as it exists even in the U.S. and highlighted the pernicious exploitation of the essential agricultural workforce.

Employment and Training Administration

The Employment and Training Administration (ETA) provides workforce training and development programs to remove barriers to good jobs and improve economic mobility for all Americans. ETA programs include Registered Apprenticeship Programs, YouthBuild, Job Corps, Reentry Employment Opportunities, and the Workforce Innovation and Opportunities Act (WIOA Youth Formula Program). These programs seek to empower historically disadvantaged populations, including women, people of color, and youth, by providing them with work-ready skills and pathways to industry accreditation.

In 2022, for example, ETA awarded more than $90 million in YouthBuild grants to provide young adults ages 16 to 24 with education and training to expand the clean energy workforce. These grants will teach young adults who are not currently in school or in the workforce in-demand construction skills focused on green building techniques, including weatherization processes, use of sustainable building materials,

Operation Blooming Onion: Human Trafficking and Forced Labor in the United States

The Department of Labor has a mandate to directly address labor exploitation through enforcement of civil laws. Its investigators play a crucial role in identifying for law enforcement partners cases of trafficking in persons, which is a criminal offense. Investigators from the Wage and Hour Division worked alongside the FBI, the U.S. Postal Service, and the U.S. Departments of State and Homeland Security in Operation Blooming Onion. This was a multi-year investigation of human trafficking of workers from Mexico and Central America to farms in southern Georgia, where the workers were subjected to forced labor. On November 22, 2021, as a result of this interagency investigation, the U.S. Department of Justice indicted 24 defendants on felony charges, including document fraud, forced labor, and human trafficking. (60)

A transnational criminal organization run by Maria Leticia Patricio, referred to in the indictments as Patricio TCO, used the H-2A visa program to engage in labor trafficking. The H-2A visa program allows U.S. employers to bring foreign nationals into the United States to temporarily fill agricultural jobs. (61) From 2015, Patricio and her network used multiple registered agricultural organizations to file fraudulent petitions seeking to bring over 71,000 foreign nationals into the U.S. to work for farm labor contractors that provided labor to farms.

Under the H-2A visa program, the sponsor is required to pay visa fees and cover the costs of transportation, lodging, meals, and border crossing fees. (60) Patricio TCO members and associates, however, illegally demanded that workers pay these costs along with other illegal recruitment fees. (61) In addition to these illegal costs, workers were subjected to other forms of deception. They were not paid promised wages, or their wages were garnished to pay off artificially inflated debts unlawfully levied by Patricio TCO members and associates. The traffickers sold and traded workers, transferring them to sites of employment other than where they had been recruited to work. (61) Traffickers also extracted forced labor through the menace of penalty. Once in the United States, traffickers confiscated workers' passports and locked workers in unsanitary and degrading living conditions at the worksites. Traffickers threatened workers with violence and deportation. At times, these threats manifested in sexual and physical violence. (62)

The rural locations of the farms, language barriers, lack of communication, fear, intimidation, and threats further isolated workers, making it more difficult for them to seek help from authorities. The defendants made over $200 million from their illegal operations, which they laundered through casinos and by purchasing land, homes, vehicles, cashier's checks, and businesses.

Operation Blooming Onion is one of the largest human trafficking and visa fraud investigations in U.S. history. Because of the investigation, over 100 people were removed from situations of modern-day slavery. (62) All indicted individuals are presumed innocent unless and until proven guilty in court.

and solar panel installation. (64) Also in 2022, ETA awarded $43 million in Growth Opportunities grants (part of the Reentry Employment Opportunities Program) to 14 NGOs and one Native American tribe for career exploration, job training, paid-work experiences, conflict resolution skills, mentorship, and supportive services to justice-involved young people. (65)

About the Iqbal Masih Award

The United States Congress established the Iqbal Masih Award for the Elimination of Child Labor in 2008 to recognize exceptional efforts by an individual, company, organization, or national government to end the worst forms of child labor. The award reflects the spirit of Iqbal Masih, a Pakistani child sold into bonded labor as a carpet weaver at age 4. He escaped his servitude at age 10 and became an outspoken advocate of children's rights, drawing international attention to his fight against child labor.. Iqbal was killed in Pakistan in 1995 at the age of 12, as he continued to call for an end to child labor. Further information about the Iqbal Masih Award and USDOL's efforts to combat child labor is available on the USDOL website at www.dol.gov/Iqbal

In 2022, the U.S. Secretary of Labor selected Blue Dragon Children's Foundation, a non-governmental organization working in Vietnam, to receive the Iqbal Masih Award in recognition of their extraordinary efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor.

Blue Dragon Children's Foundation has been working to end human trafficking in Vietnam for nearly 20 years. The organization is a leader in supporting trafficking survivors, partnering with government, and creating safe spaces for vulnerable youth. Blue Dragon has rescued over 1,000 children and adults from human trafficking and has sent nearly 6,000 children back to school and training. The organization also works closely with local law enforcement and the Government of Vietnam to identify offenders and interrupt trafficking rings within Vietnam and abroad. In addition to their work to combat human trafficking, Blue Dragon provides shelter, education, and family reunion to homeless children, as well as helping disadvantaged and street children stay in school. Blue Dragon stands at the vanguard for progress to end the worst forms of child labor and has been recognized globally for their work and commitment to ending exploitation.

Definitions Related to Child Labor and Forced Labor

Definitions related to child labor are guided by ILO C. 138 on Minimum Age and ILO C. 182 on Worst Forms of Child Labor. ILO's Resolution Concerning Statistics of Child Labor, developed during the 18th International Conference of Labor Statisticians (ICLS), and amendments made during the 20th ICLS provide the international framework for measuring children's work. See Appendix 7 for additional definitions.

Working Children

Per the Resolution Concerning Statistics of Child Labor developed during the 18th ICLS, working children are those engaged in any productive activity for at least 1 hour during the reference period. Productive activity includes market production and certain types of non-market production, principally the production of goods and services for their families' use. The 20th ICLS introduced changes to the definition of working children to align that definition with internationally accepted definitions of work for adults. The new definition classifies working children as those engaged in any activity to produce goods or to provide services for use by others or for their own use. In summary, the new definition includes the production of additional types of services for family use, unpaid trainee work by children, volunteer work by children, and other work activities by children. Since most countries are in the process of adapting survey instruments to reflect this new definition, the definition of working children from the 18th ICLS Resolution has been used in this report. The work that children perform may be within the formal or informal economy, inside or outside of family settings, whether paid or unpaid. This includes children working in domestic service outside the child's own household for an employer, paid or unpaid. (67; 68)

Child Labor

Child labor is a subset of working children and is work below the minimum age for work, as established in national legislation that conforms to international standards. The definition includes the worst forms of child labor. Child labor is a subset of working children because child labor excludes children who work limited hours per week in permitted light work and those who are above the minimum age who engage in work not classified as a worst form of child labor. (67; 68)

Worst Forms of Child Labor

The term "worst forms of child labor" refers to activities described and as understood in ILO C. 182. (5) Under Article 3 of the Convention, the worst forms of child labor comprise the following activities:

- All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery, such as the sale and trafficking of children, debt bondage and serfdom, and forced or compulsory labor, including forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict;
- The use, procuring, or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography, or for pornographic purposes;
- The use, procuring, or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs as defined in the relevant international treaties; and
- Work which, by its nature or the circumstances under which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety, or morals of children.

Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor

For this report, the term “categorical worst forms of child labor” refers to child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182. This category does not include the worst forms of child labor identified under Article 3(d) as “hazardous work.” (5)

Hazardous Work

The term “hazardous work” refers to the worst form of child labor identified in ILO C. 182, Article 3(d), “work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety, or morals of children.” ILO C. 182, Article 4, directs countries to consult with employers and workers to identify the types of hazardous work that should be prohibited by law or regulation. Hazardous work lists may describe specific activities, occupations, industries, or conditions. (5)

Forced Labor

Forced labor, under international standards, is defined as all work or service that is exacted from any person under the menace of any penalty and for which the worker does not offer themselves voluntarily. (69) Forced labor is work obtained by force, fraud, or coercion, including (1) by threat of serious harm to, or physical restraint against, any person; (3) by means of any scheme, plan, or pattern intended to cause the person to believe that if the person did not perform such labor or services, the person or another person would suffer serious harm or physical restraint; or (2) by means of the abuse or threatened abuse of law or the legal process. (71) Circumstances that may give rise to involuntary work, when undertaken under deception or uninformed, include, inter alia, unfree recruitment at birth or through transaction such as slavery or bonded labor; situations in which the worker must perform a job of a different nature from that specified during recruitment without their consent; abusive requirements for overtime or on-call work that were not previously agreed to with the employer; work in hazardous conditions to which the worker has not consented, with or without compensation or protective equipment; work with very low or no wages; degrading living conditions imposed by the employer; work for other employers than agreed to; work for a longer period of time than agreed to; and work with no or limited freedom to terminate the work contract. (71)

Slavery and Practices Similar to Slavery

Slavery is the status or condition of a person over whom any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership are exercised. (72) Practices similar to slavery includes:

- Debt bondage—the status or condition arising from a pledge by a debtor of his personal services or of those of a person under his control as security for a debt, if the value of those services as reasonably assessed is not applied towards the liquidation of the debt or the length and nature of those services are not respectively limited and defined;
- Serfdom is defined as the condition or status of a tenant who is by law, custom or agreement bound to live and labor on land belonging to another person and to render some determinate service to such other person, whether for reward or not, and is not free to change his status;
- Forced or compulsory labor. (73)

Forced Child Labor

Forced child labor is a categorical worst form of child labor under ILO C. 182. (5) Children are in forced child labor if subjected to work under the threat or menace of penalty. Children older than the minimum age for work are in forced child labor if work is involuntary and they are under the menace of penalty. For children younger than the minimum age, involuntariness does not need to be established because children under the minimum age cannot legally consent to work. Forced child labor also includes work performed with or for the child's parents for a third party under the threat or menace of any penalty directly applied to the child or parents. All children who are made to work as a result of parental forced labor are engaged in forced child labor. (74)

Appendix 3

ILO Instruments Related to Child Labor and Forced Labor

The ILO brings together government, employer, and worker representatives of member states to establish and supervise the implementation of international labor standards and develop policies and implement programs to advance decent work. (75) International labor standards are legal instruments drawn up by these ILO constituents that set out basic principles and rights at work. They can take the form of either conventions, protocols, or recommendations. Conventions and protocols are international treaties that are legally binding on ratifying member states. Ratifying countries commit themselves to implementing the convention or protocol in national law and practice, and reporting on its application at regular intervals. Recommendations are non-binding and provide guidelines for action, either as a complement to a convention or as a stand-alone instrument. The following paragraphs describe key ILO instruments related to child labor and the minimum ages set by countries related to these instruments.

ILO Convention No. 138: Minimum Age for Admission to Employment, 1973

ILO C. 138 establishes that the minimum age of admission into employment or work in any occupation "shall not be less than the age of completion of compulsory schooling, and, in any case, shall not be less than fifteen" (Article 2(3)). Countries whose economy and educational facilities are insufficiently developed may initially specify a minimum legal working age of 14 when ratifying the Convention. In addition, Article 7(1) says that national laws or regulations may permit the employment or work of children ages 13 to 15 years if for light work. Countries that specify a minimum legal working age of 14 may permit light work for children ages 12 to 14. (76)

ILO Convention No. 182: Worst Forms of Child Labor, 1999

ILO C. 182 defines the worst forms of child labor and requires ratifying countries to take immediate action to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labor for persons under age 18.

Among other actions, ILO C. 182 requires ratifying countries to take effective and timebound measures to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor; help remove children from the worst forms of child labor and provide for their rehabilitation and social integration; ensure that children removed from the worst forms of child labor have access to free basic education and, wherever possible and appropriate, vocational training; identify and reach out to children at special risk; take into account the special situation of girls; consult with employer and worker organizations to create appropriate mechanisms to monitor implementation of the convention; and assist one another in implementing the convention. (5)

Worst Forms of Child Labor Recommendation No. 190, 1999

Recommendation No. 190 supplements ILO C. 182 and provides non-binding practical guidance in applying the Convention. Among other provisions, it includes a list of working conditions and types of work that should be considered when determining what comprises hazardous work.

ILO Convention No. 29: Forced Labor, 1930

ILO C. 29 prohibits all forms of forced or compulsory labor, which is defined as "all work or service which is exacted from any person under the menace of any penalty and for which the person has not offered himself voluntarily." (69)

ILO Convention No. 105: Abolition of Forced Labor Convention, 1957

ILO C. 105 prohibits forced or compulsory labor as a means of political coercion or education, or as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social, or economic system; as a method of mobilizing and using labor for economic development; as a means of labor discipline; as a punishment for having participated in strikes; and as a means of racial, social, national, or religious discrimination. (77)

Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labor Convention, 1930

The Forced Labor Protocol reaffirms the forced labor definition in ILO C. 29. It requires ratifying countries to take effective measures to prevent and eliminate forced and compulsory labor, to sanction perpetrators, and provide victims with protection and access to appropriate remedies, such as compensation. It also requires ratifying countries to develop a national policy and plan of action to address forced or compulsory labor in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations. (78) The Protocol supplements ILO C. 29; as such, only ILO member states that have ratified the convention can ratify the protocol.

Forced Labor (Supplementary Measures) Recommendation No. 203, 2014

Recommendation No. 203 provides non-binding practical guidance in the areas of prevention, protection of victims and ensuring their access to justice and remedies, enforcement, and international cooperation. It supplements both the protocol and the convention. (79)

Appendix 4

How to Read a TDA Country Profile

● Country Overview: Each country profile begins with an overview for 2021 in a single paragraph, starting with a statement identifying the assessment level assigned to the country for 2021. Following the statement of assessment, the paragraph offers a summary of key findings in the country profile. The narrative includes any meaningful efforts taken by a government, defined as efforts in key areas where the government advanced its commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The narrative also notes the most common or egregious forms of child labor found in the country and highlights areas in which key gaps in government efforts remain.

● Section I: Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of Child Labor: The first section of each country profile attempts to provide, to the extent that information is available, a comprehensive picture of the worst forms of child labor in the country.

● Table 1, Statistics on Children's Work and Education, contains at least four variables: percentage of working children, school attendance rate, percentage of children combining work and school, and primary completion rate. A majority of the country profiles have data for at least one of these variables. A smaller set of profiles contains data on children's work by sector. The age and methodologies of the original surveys that provide the underlying data vary, and in some cases, the surveys may not reflect the true magnitude of the child labor problem in the country.

● Table 2, Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity, groups types of children's work by sector, using categories established by the ILO and Understanding Children's Work for national child labor surveys (Agriculture, Industry, and Services), and a category intended to capture work understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182, referred to by the report as "Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor." Sectors and specific activities performed by children are sorted into these categories according to internationally accepted industry and occupational codes.

● The first table note identifies sectors or activities determined to be hazardous by national law or regulation as understood under Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182, and the second table note provides the definition of Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor.

● The table is followed by a narrative highlighting additional sector-specific information and social, economic, or political issues that affect the prevalence of child labor, such as barriers to accessing education, or major socio-economic shocks to the country that may inhibit the government's ability to address child labor, such as a natural disaster or armed conflict.

In 2021, Mexico made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government carried out 5,000 more labor inspections compared to the previous year and established a new voluntary labor reporting system for businesses to confirm compliance with the Labor Code. The Commission on the Rights of Refugee and Migrant Children and Adolescents also published a report on its activities during the year aiming to ensure the best interests of migrant and refugee children, including unaccompanied minors. Additionally, the government published and implemented the National Program for Children and Adolescents 2021–2024, and the Benito Juárez Wellbeing National Scholarship Program reached 9.8 million students. However, children in Mexico are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in illicit activities, such as the production and trafficking of drugs. Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture, including in the production of chile peppers, coffee, sugarcane, and tomatoes. In 2021, the government eliminated many social programs that increased educational access and reduced risk for child labor in marginalized communities. Although nearly 60 percent of all employment in Mexico occurs in the informal sector, federal and some state-level labor inspectors carry out inspections in the informal sector only after receiving formal complaints. In addition, labor and criminal law enforcement agencies lacked human and financial resources and the government published limited information on its labor and criminal law enforcement efforts. Social programs to eliminate child labor also do not address all relevant sectors in which child labor is found in Mexico.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Mexico are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in illicit activities, such as the production and trafficking of drugs. (1–4) Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture, including in the production of chile peppers, coffee, sugarcane, and tomatoes. (5,6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Mexico.

Attending School (%)	5 to 14	97.5

In 2021, reports suggest that almost 850,000 children did not continue their basic education. This includes 656,000 students who did not transition from elementary school to lower secondary school. (46,47) Government reports also show that at least 1,200 schools closed between 2020 and 2021. In addition, students reported difficulty accessing distance learning programs as at least half of Mexican households do not have computers or Internet access, while 80 percent of indigenous or rural households lacked computers or Internet access. (47,48) The lack of access to education and school abandonment leaves children more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. (4,17,49,50)

Section II: Legal Framework for Child Labor

The second section indicates whether a country has ratified key international instruments related to child labor and assesses whether a country's legal framework meets international standards. This section begins with a statement about the extent to which the government has ratified key international conventions concerning child labor.

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor, lists the relevant UN conventions concerning child labor. A checkmark indicates the country's ratification, acceptance, accession, to the instrument, considering that these actions have the same practical legal effect regarding the substantive obligations of the instrument as ratification. If other relevant international instruments, beyond those listed in the table, were ratified during the reporting period, this may be recognized in a short narrative following the table.

A statement above Table 4, Laws and Regulations on Child Labor, indicates whether the government's laws and regulations related to child labor meet ILO C. 138 and C. 182, or whether gaps exist in the legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4 lists each of the relevant legal standards and notes which laws meet and do not meet international standards. Notes under Table 4 identify whether a government does not use conscription for military service, whether a government does not have a standing military, and whether an age is calculated based on available information.

The table is followed by a narrative describing any relevant laws that the government enacted or advanced to a significant step in the legislative process during the reporting period. If the government failed to take action on an existing draft bill that would fill a gap in the legal framework related to child labor, this also may be noted. The narrative also discusses why existing laws do not meet international standards.

Section III: Enforcement of Laws on Child Labor

The third section describes the roles of government agencies in enforcing laws related to child labor and reports on efforts made during the reporting period. It begins with a statement about whether the government has established institutional mechanisms to enforce laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5), notes whether gaps exist within the authority or operations of the ministries responsible for law enforcement, or whether enforcement data are missing.

Table 5, Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement, lists the agencies charged with enforcing such laws and identifies each agency's role. A table note identifies whether an agency responsible for child labor enforcement was created during the reporting period. A subsequent narrative describes gaps in agency responsibilities or new information during the reporting period.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Mexico has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓

The government's laws and regulations are in line with relevant international standards (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 123 of the Constitution; Article 22 bis of the Labor Code; Article 47 of the Law on the Rights of Children and Adolescents; Article 6 of the General Law on Education (16,88-90)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 175 of the Labor Code (16)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Articles 175 and 176 of the Labor Code (16)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 1 and 5 of the Constitution; Articles 11, 12, and 22 of the Trafficking in Persons Law; Article 47 of the Law on the Rights of Children and Adolescents (88,89,91)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 10 of the Trafficking in Persons Law; Article 47 of the Law on the Rights of Children and Adolescents (89,91)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 202–205 of the Federal Penal Code; Articles 13 and 18 of the Trafficking in Persons Law; Article 47 of the Law on the Rights of Children and Adolescents (89,91,92)

In April 2022, Mexico enacted a reform to the Labor Code that would permit children as young as 15 to work in some agricultural employment. Previously, Article 176 of the Labor Code deemed work in agriculture, hunting and fishing as hazardous and, accordingly, prohibited children under the age of 18 from engaging in this kind of work. (16,65,66,95) The reform qualified the language in Art. 176 to prohibit minors from engaging in these activities while using chemicals, handling machinery, operating heavy vehicles, and carrying out other tasks as determined by the competent authority. The STPS has 180 days after the entry in force of the reform to classify activities in Art. 176 and determine which activities would be lower risk and thus permissible for minors. (65,66,95) Proponents of the reform state that permitting minors to work in low-risk agricultural activities may create formal employment opportunities in rural areas. (17,66,67) However, critics suggests that the reform may jeopardize the health and safety of children by exposing them to the hazards and extreme conditions involved in agricultural work. Others view the reform as a setback for child labor protections and note that the reform lacks corresponding mechanisms and resources for ensuring labor law

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established relevant institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Secretariat of Labor and Social Welfare (STPS)	Leads efforts to enforce child labor laws, conduct labor inspections, and refer cases for investigation. The Federal Prosecutor for the Defense of Work, an independent entity under STPS, prosecutes cases in which workers' rights are violated, including cases with workers under age 18. (16,99-104) The STPS inspectorate is responsible for labor law enforcement in 22 industrial sectors under federal jurisdiction, including the sugar and tobacco industries, 3 types of enterprises, and labor matters affecting 2 or more states. The state-level labor inspectorates are responsible for labor law enforcement in all other situations. (16,88,105)
Attorney General of the Republic (FGR)	Prosecutes crimes involving human trafficking, including criminal violations related to child trafficking and other worst forms of child labor. The FGR's Specialized Unit for Crimes against Women and Trafficking in Persons (FEVIMTRA) and the Specialized Unit on Trafficking in Minors, People, and Organs are responsible for investigating and prosecuting human trafficking cases at the federal level. (4,104,106-109) In addition, all 32 states have specialized trafficking in persons prosecutors or units, which are responsible for investigating and prosecuting cases of human trafficking at the state level. Some state trafficking in persons units or prosecutors also prosecute cases of gender-based violence. (52,64,110,111) Federal and state trafficking in persons units receive some cases of child trafficking from the National Institute of Migration and the Mexican Commission for Refugee Assistance. (80,83,112-115)

Table 6 and Table 7 provide data on labor law and criminal law enforcement efforts from the current and previous reporting years.

Table 6, Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor, provides information on labor law enforcement data, including information about the labor inspectorate's financial and human resources; authority to conduct inspections and assess penalties; and actions and mechanisms to enforce labor laws, including those related to child labor.

Table 7, Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor, provides information on criminal law enforcement data, including information about actions and mechanisms to enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor.

Notes under each table identify whether the data included in the tables fall outside of the calendar year. A narrative follows each of these tables with more specific information on government mechanisms and efforts and includes findings in which ILAB has concluded that government efforts fall short.

Section IV: Coordination of Government Efforts on Child Labor. The fourth section provides information on institutions charged with coordinating efforts related to child labor. It begins with a statement indicating whether the government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, and whether any gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor.

Table 8, Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor, lists the country's key coordinating bodies; their composition, if known; and their respective mandates, as well as their efforts during the reporting period. A table note states whether a mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period. A subsequent narrative may include findings on gaps in their efforts.

Section V: Government Policies on Child Labor. The fifth section describes a country's policies and plans to combat child labor and the development of policies that explicitly incorporate the issue of child labor. It begins with a statement indicating whether the government has established policies related to child labor, and whether policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Mexico took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Secretariat of Labor and Social Welfare (STPS) that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including insufficient human and financial resource allocation.

Between January and October 2021, the Secretariat for Security and Citizen Protection (SSPC) conducted 638 investigations into potential cases of human trafficking, representing an increase of almost 10 percent from the previous year. As a result of these inspections, the SSPC identified 650 trafficking victims. (153,154) However, the SSPC did not disaggregate the number of child and adult victims. (153,154) In addition, research conducted by the Consejo Ciudadano, which operates the National Trafficking Line, found fraudulent job offers for work in factories and in agriculture was the main form of recruitment used by human traffickers during the reporting period. The National Trafficking Line also registered an increase in the proportion of calls involving children being trafficked, making up as many as 47 percent of calls to the hotline, up from 32 percent in 2019. (155)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including inefficiency in accomplishing mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Institutional Commission for Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Adolescent Workers of the Permitted Age in Mexico (CITI)	Coordinates Mexico's activities to develop policies, approve programs, and coordinate, monitor, and evaluate efforts to eliminate child labor, especially its worst forms. Chaired by STPS and includes representatives from the secretariats of the Interior, Economy, Foreign Affairs, Wellbeing, Agriculture, Transportation, Education, Health, Tourism, Social Security, SNDIF, and FGR. (17,141) Meets on a quarterly basis and includes NGO networks and international technical and financial partners, such as UNODC and IOM. During the reporting period, the CITI finalized the Plan of Action on Child Labor 2021–2024. (17,141,148)
Inter-Institutional Commission for the Prevention, Sanction and Eradication of Crimes Related to Trafficking in Persons and for the Protection and Support of Victims of those Crimes	Defines policy and coordinates efforts to address human trafficking in Mexico. Chaired by the Secretariat of the Interior and includes representatives from STPS, secretariats of numerous other government ministries, NGOs, and international technical partners. (91,160) Although the commission met seven times in 2021, research was unable to determine what activities this committee carried out during the reporting period. (17,53)
National System for the Protection of Children and Adolescents (SIPINNA)	Coordinates national child protection policy and programs. Chaired by the Secretariat of the Interior and made up of a steering committee from multiple other ministries and representatives of civil society groups. (90) During the reporting period, SIPINNA was active and held various meetings to review, finalize, and publish the National Program for Children and Adolescents (PRONAPPINA) 2021–2024. (17)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including lack of coverage of all worst forms of child labor.

Table 9, Key Policies Related to Child Labor, lists the country's key policies and provides a description of each policy's objectives and any developments in implementation, to the extent known, that occurred during the reporting period. Table notes identify policies that were approved during the reporting period and whether there are any small-scale policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.

The narrative following the table notes includes findings related to whether existing policies sufficiently address child labor issues in the country.

Section VI: Social Programs to Address Child Labor

The sixth section describes social programs launched or implemented during the reporting period that focus on child labor, and programs that address poverty, education, and other related matters that could have a beneficial effect on child labor. It begins with a statement as to whether the government funded or participated in social programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, and whether gaps exist in these social programs.

Table 10, Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor, lists the country's key social programs and descriptions, including its activities and accomplishments, to the extent known, during the reporting period. Where possible, programs are hyperlinked to project websites for additional information. Table notes identify social programs that are funded by the government or were launched during the reporting period, and whether the government had small-scale social programs with the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor.

The narrative following the tables also may include an analysis of the extent to which social programs were sufficient to address the scope of the problem or covered the key sectors in which children are known to work in the country.

Section VII: Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The last section of each country profile (Table 11) is a set of suggested actions for the country to consider taking in order to advance the elimination of child labor.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Program for the Secretariat of Labor and Social Welfare (2020–2024)	Aims to strengthen the fundamental rights of work and to increase labor force participation in the formal sector. The plan prioritizes addressing child labor as part of STPS' social inclusion strategy. (164) During the reporting period, a training program on child labor and the rights of children and adolescents was developed for representatives from each of the 32 federal entities, federal labor inspectors, and STPS staff. (17,165)
National Program for Children and Adolescents (PRONAPPINA) 2021–2024†	Aims to guarantee the rights of children and adolescents by establishing mechanisms to support their growth and development. (166)
Plan of Action on Child Labor 2021–2024†	Aims to promote a culture of prevention against child labor and to protect the human and labor rights of children and adolescents. (167)

Mexico became a Pathfinder country under Alliance 8.7 in 2019 to accelerate commitments toward achieving Sustainable Development Goal Target 8.7, which calls for the eradication of forced labor, modern slavery, and human trafficking by 2030, and the eradication of child labor by 2025. (177,178) As a Pathfinder country, the government developed and implemented the Alliance 8.7 Roadmap to Eradicate Child Labor, Forced Labor, and

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

The government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy to address the problem in all sectors and in all states.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Benito Juárez Wellbeing National Scholarship Program†	Secretariat of Public Education cash transfer program that offers two types of scholarships for families living in poverty and students at risk of school desertion. The Wellbeing Basic Education Family Scholarship provides bi-monthly payments of $80 per household for all children under age 15 enrolled in school, while the Benito Juárez Scholarship provides bi-monthly payments of $80 to each child enrolled in high school. (183–185) Although the program reaches a high number of students, it has been criticized for providing insufficient cash transfers, lacking monitoring and evaluation, and having implementation issues. (186–190) In 2021, the program reached 9.8 million students. (191)
Support for Indigenous Education Program†	Implemented by the National Institute of Indigenous Peoples to support educational access of children from indigenous and Afro-descendant communities through scholarships, boarding houses, and nutritional support. (192) In 2021, the program assisted 63,049 children through the program's Casas y Comedores de la Niñez Indígena and Casas y Comedores Comunitarios del Estudiante Indígena. (193)
Assistance for At-Risk Children and Adolescents Program (PAMAR)‡	Implemented by the SNDIF at the state and municipal levels to assist youth at risk for child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and in illicit activities, by providing shelters, psychosocial assistance, and training. In 2021, this program was implemented by the SNDIF in 26 states and 445 municipalities benefiting 68,503 children and adolescents, but it is not implemented across all states and municipalities in which the program is needed. (17,53)
USDOL-Funded Projects	USDOL-funded projects that aim to eliminate child labor through research, increase labor inspection capacity, and expand participation in education, training, and social protection programs. Campos de Esperanza is an $11 million project implemented by World Vision which has worked with the sugarcane sector to help improve working conditions for over 5,300 sugarcane workers in targeted agricultural communities in Oaxaca and Veracruz. MAP16 is an ILO-implemented global project, with $2.4 million dedicated to support the National Child Labor Survey (ENTI 2019) with the results released in 2020. (7,194,195) MAP16 also supported the Regional Initiative Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (RILAC) program to develop maps that show communities at risk of child labor and has worked with local government in the States of Mexico and Chiapas to develop policy responses. (7,194,195) Other projects include: Senderos, an $8 million project implemented by Verité to address child and forced labor in the sugarcane and tobacco sectors in Jalisco and Nayarit; EQUAL, a $5 million project implemented by World Vision to increase women's and adolescent girls' economic empowerment in the agricultural sector; COFFEE, a $2.2 million project implemented by Verité in Brazil, Colombia, and Mexico to promote social compliance and develop tools for businesses to establish systems to prevent, detect, and combat child and forced labor in coffee supply chains; and Improving Workers' Occupational Safety and Health in Selected Supply Chains in Mexico – A Vision Zero Fund, a $5 million project implemented by the ILO's Vision Zero Fund to improve the occupational safety and health of workers, with a focus on COVID-19, female workers, and workers in vulnerable conditions. Two new additional projects include: Building a Comprehensive Government of Mexico Approach to Combating Child Labor and Forced Labor®, a $13 million ILO-implemented project to strengthen the capacity and enhance the effectiveness of the Government of Mexico to collect and analyze data on child labor, forced labor, and human trafficking for the purposes of informing federal policies and programming; and Sustentor®, a $5 million project implemented by Social Accountability International to increase private sector stakeholders' accountability to uphold core labor standards focusing on the chile pepper and tomato sector. (196–201) In 2021, USDOL-funded projects trained 130 labor inspectors and 399 teachers on identifying and preventing child labor and provided over 1,400 children in child labor or at risk of child labor with education services. (195,196,198) For additional information, please visit our website.

§ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (42,141,202–206)

During the reporting period, the government eliminated many social programs that increased education access and reduced risk for child labor for indigenous children, migrant and refugee children, and children from other vulnerable groups. These programs included the Indigenous People's Education Diversity Program (PADEI), Educational Program for Migrant School Population (PAPEM), and the Full-Time Schools Program (PETC). (17,207–211) Research could not confirm whether these programs will be replaced by new programs in future years.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Mexico (Table 11).

Appendix 5

TDA Country Assessment Criteria

Each country in this report receives an assessment to indicate the USDOL's findings on the country's level of advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period. There are five possible assessment levels: Significant Advancement, Moderate Advancement, Minimal Advancement, No Advancement, or No Assessment.

Significant Advancement

For a country to be assessed as having significantly advanced efforts in 2021, the country must have (1) instituted the minimum requirements related to laws and regulations, mechanisms, and programs to address and prevent the worst forms of child labor (see Exhibit 1); and (2) during the reporting period, made meaningful efforts in all relevant areas covering laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs, which may have included taking the suggested actions recommended in the 2020 report.

Moderate Advancement

A country moderately advanced its efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor in 2021 if it made meaningful efforts during the reporting period in some relevant areas covering laws and

Exhibit 1

Minimum Requirements Needed to be Considered for a Significant Advancement Assessment

In order for a country to be eligible to receive an assessment of Significant Advancement, a country must have:

- Established a minimum age for work that meets international standards;
- Established a minimum age for hazardous work that meets international standards;
- Established legal prohibitions against forced labor that meet international standards;
- Established legal prohibitions against child trafficking that meet international standards;
- Established legal prohibitions against commercial sexual exploitation of children that meet international standards;
- Established legal prohibitions against the use of children for illicit activities that meet international standards;
- Designated a competent authority or implemented institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor;
- Imposed penalties for violations related to the worst forms of child labor;
- Took active measures to ensure that children are not inappropriately incarcerated, penalized, or physically harmed for unlawful acts as a direct result of being a victim of the worst forms of child labor;
- Took active measures to investigate, prosecute, convict, and sentence public officials who participate in or facilitate the worst forms of child labor;
- Made a good-faith effort to collect and publish labor and criminal law enforcement data; and
- Directly funded a significant social program that includes the goal of eliminating child labor or addressing the root causes of the problem, such as lack of educational opportunities, poverty, or discrimination.

regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs, which may have included taking the suggested actions recommended in 2020.

Minimal Advancement

Three types of countries made minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in 2021. The first is a country that made meaningful efforts during the reporting period in a few relevant areas covering laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs, which may have included taking the suggested actions recommended in 2020.

The other two types of countries are those that, regardless of meaningful efforts made in relevant areas, minimally advanced as a result of establishing or failing to remedy regressive or significantly detrimental laws, policies, or practices that delayed advancement in the elimination of the worst forms of child labor. Examples of regressive or significantly detrimental laws, policies, or practices include lowering the minimum age for work below international standards, recruiting or using children in armed conflict, and continuing to impose administrative barriers to child labor inspections. The following points make distinctions between regression and continued law, policy, or practice:

- Regression in Law, Policy, or Practice that Delayed Advancement. This type of country made meaningful efforts in a few or more relevant areas but established a regressive or significantly detrimental law, policy, or practice during the reporting period that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor.
- Continued Law, Policy, or Practice that Delayed Advancement. This type of country made meaningful efforts in a few or more relevant areas but failed to remedy a regressive or significantly detrimental law, policy, or practice established in previous years, which delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor.

No Advancement

Three types of countries made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in 2021. The first is a country that made no meaningful efforts to advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period.

The other two types of countries are those that, regardless of whether meaningful efforts in relevant areas were made, had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than isolated incidents, which is considered an egregious form of exploitation. Complicity can occur when a government is involved in forced child labor at any level of government, including at the local, regional, or national level. Such incidents involve direct or proactive government action to compel children under age 18 to work. The following points make distinctions between a country making no efforts and being complicit and a country making efforts but being complicit:

- No Efforts and Complicit in Forced Child Labor. This type of country made no meaningful efforts, took no suggested actions reported in 2020, and had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than isolated incidents in 2021.
- Efforts Made but Complicit in Forced Child Labor. This type of country made meaningful efforts, which may have included taking the suggested actions reported in 2020 but had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than isolated incidents in 2021.

No Assessment

This assessment is reserved for countries in which the population of children is either non-existent or extremely small (fewer than 50), there is no evidence of the worst forms of child labor and the country appears to have an adequate preventive legal and enforcement framework on child labor, or when a country is included in the report for the first time or receives a suggested action for the first time. This year, no assessment has been made regarding Christmas Island, Cocos (Keeling) Islands, and Wallis and Futuna.

Appendix 7:

Reference Materials—Key Concepts and Definitions

Children's Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions

In this report, 105 country profiles include a statistical table (Table 1, Statistics on Children's Work and Education) with data on the percentage of working children, school attendance rate, percentage of children who combine school and work, and/ or primary completion rate. For a smaller set of profiles, a chart lists the percentages of children who work by sector.

This appendix provides definitions and descriptions of the sources for these data and some of the strengths and weakness inherent within them. In a few cases, more current sources of data may be available than the ones used in this report; however, the most reliable, standardized sources available to date are used to allow for cross-country comparisons. Because reliable child labor surveys are not available for many countries, in some cases, USDOL uses statistics from child labor surveys that are more than 10 years old (data from 2011). If data did not exist from the sources described below, if no other reliable and publicly available source of data exists for a country, or if data exist but have not been analyzed to allow for cross-country comparisons, this report concludes that the statistics are "unavailable."

Working Children

Many of the statistical tables in the country profiles in this report present data on the percentage and number of working children. Data presented in the current report may differ from data that were presented in previous reports because updated data have become available.

Definition

The term "working children" describes children engaged in any productive activity for at least 1 hour during the reference period. Productive activity includes market production and certain types of non-market production, principally the production of goods and services for own use. The work that children perform may be in the formal or informal economy, inside or outside family settings, or for pay or profit. This includes children working in domestic service outside the child's own household for an employer, paid or unpaid. This definition is in accordance with the Resolution to Amend the 18th ICLS Resolution Concerning Statistics of Child Labour, adopted by the 20th International Conference of Labour Statisticians (ICLS) in 2018, and the report ILO and UNICEF Child Labour: Global Estimates 2020, Trends and the Road Forward. (16; 67) The 20th ICLS definition classifies working children as those engaged in any activity to produce goods or to provide services for use by others or for own use. The definition also includes the production of additional types of services for family use, unpaid trainee work by children, volunteer work by children, and other work activities by children. Since most countries are in the process of adapting survey instruments to reflect this new definition, the definition of working children from the 18th ICLS Resolution has been used in this report.

Working Children Versus Children Engaged in Child Labor

This report presents statistics on “working children” rather than on “children involved in child labor.” These terms are defined precisely in the section “Definitions Related to Child Labor.” The definition of working children does not vary among countries and, therefore, statistics on working children are comparable across the country profiles. In contrast, the definition of children involved in child labor is based on national legislation, including, for example, the minimum age for work, which varies from country to country. As a result, child labor data are not comparable across countries. Furthermore, these country-level statistics may not disaggregate child labor from the broader category of child work, thereby including children who work only a few hours a week in permitted light work. For the purposes of this report, ILAB is unable to clearly articulate the proportion of working children who are involved in child labor.

Data Sources and Limitations

Data are from the ILO’s analysis of primarily four survey types: (1) the ILO’s Statistical Information and Monitoring Program on Child Labor (SIMPOC) surveys; (2) national Labor Force Surveys (LFS); (3) UNICEF’s Multiple Indicator Cluster Surveys (MICS); and (4) other national and regional household surveys, including Demographic and Health Surveys (DHS). (93)

According to ILO researchers, typical surveys on children’s work do not collect sufficiently detailed information on children’s activities to accurately measure economic activity. (100) This observation was repeated in December 2008 at the 18th ICLS. A resolution adopted at the conference provides guidelines for governments on collecting child labor data. Specifically, the guidance indicates that countries can choose to use a broad framework to measure children’s work and child labor that encompasses unpaid household services or countries can use a narrower definition of children’s work that excludes such services, as long as the definition used is clearly specified. (94) This resolution is contributing to the collection of more comparable data on children’s involvement in non-market activities. In addition, although the 20th ICLS introduced changes to the definition of working children to align it with internationally accepted definitions of work for adults, since most countries are in the process of adapting survey instruments to reflect this new definition, the definition of working children from the 18th ICLS resolution has been used in this report.

In analyzing the data from the above-mentioned surveys, the ILO attempted to apply a standard definition of children’s work, although UNICEF’s MICS and ILO’s SIMPOC reports, for example, each use a different definition of work. As of the writing of this report, MICS reports include household chores in their definition of work, while some SIMPOC reports do not, depending on each country’s basis for reporting. To the extent possible, the ILO applied a common definition of work to the micro-data described. To date, this has resulted in the individual analysis of more than 250 datasets. While every attempt was made to present a standardized child work statistic, differences across the surveys have the potential to affect the comparability of statistics across countries and across years. Some of these differences are explained in greater detail here; however, in general, they include differing age groups, questionnaire content and wording, purpose of the survey, sample design, non-sampling errors, and the year of data collection.

In general, data are presented for children ages 5 to 14; however, some of the profiles present a work statistic for children ages 6 to 14, 7 to 14, or 10 to 14, depending on the age categories used in the original survey. The wording of work-related questions also may affect the results. For example, the question on work in these surveys usually refers to work during the past 7 days; however, some surveys may refer to work activities during the past 12 months, and thus they are likely to capture a higher proportion of working children than surveys with 7-day timeframes. The purpose of the survey—whether specifically to measure children's work and child labor (SIMPOC surveys) or measure the labor force participation of adults—may affect estimates of children's work. (96) Sample design may also affect survey results. For example, children's work is often clustered geographically; SIMPOC surveys are designed to capture children's work in such geographic areas. As a result, estimates of working children vary across surveys that do not use the same sample design. (97) The ILO and UNICEF continue to investigate the effects of these survey differences on estimates of children's work.

As noted, some country profiles also include the sector in which children reportedly work. For some surveys, the sector of work was not reported by the entire sample of working children. Therefore, the distribution of children working by sector—agriculture, industry, and services—represents children with non-missing data for the sector of work. Additional information on the sectors of work reported in the chart appear in Table 1.

Percentage of Children Attending School

The percentage of children attending school is the share of all children within a specified age group that reported attending school. The ILO data described above in the section "Working Children" are used to develop country-specific school attendance statistics. To be consistent with estimates of working children, the age group for which attendance statistics are calculated for children is generally ages 5 to 14. In some cases, however, different age categories are used, usually ages 6 to 14, 7 to 14, or 10 to 14.

Percentage of Children Combining Work and School

The percentage of children who combine work and school is the share of all children within a specified age group reporting both working and attending school. The ILO data described earlier under "Working Children" are used to develop country-specific statistics on children combining work and school. The age group for which these statistics are calculated is usually for children ages 7 to 14 or 10 to 14.

Primary Completion Rate

This report uses the "gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education" as a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade, regardless of age. Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over- and underage children who enter primary school late or early or repeat grades.

Data Sources and Limitations

Unlike the other statistics presented in the country profile data tables, which are all based on the ILO analysis described earlier, primary completion rate data are from the UNESCO Institute for Statistics. The data were downloaded on March 25, 2022 and are available at <http://data.uis.unesco.org/>. Further information on this statistic is available from the UNESCO Institute for Statistics Glossary at <http://uis.unesco.org/en/glossary>.

UNESCO uses population estimates from the United Nations Development Program (UNDP) to calculate some of the rates it publishes, including the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. These population estimates change over time. The last revision that affected the statistics used in this report was in February 2021. All population-based indicators, including the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education, are re-calculated every year using the latest estimates. For some countries and years, when the new UNDP population estimates are found to be inconsistent with education data, related indicators are removed.

All updates made to UNESCO data on the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education are reflected in the primary completion rate statistic included in this report.

Labor Law Enforcement: Sources and Definitions

Labor Force Calculation

This report uses data from either government-reported labor force statistics collected by the ILO or from labor force estimates by the ILO modeled on a combination of demographic and economic factors. Both sources of labor force data provide the most recent estimates for countries' total labor force. This number is used to calculate a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors based on the country's level of development, as determined by the UN. (92)

Country Classification

For analyses, the Development Policy and Analysis Division of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of four broad categories: (1) developed economies, (2) economies in transition, (3) developing economies, and (4) least developed countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries, in particular the economies in transition, have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for analyses, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. This is decided upon by the UN Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly deciding on the list of least developed countries based on recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met for per capita gross national income, a human assets index, and an economic vulnerability index. For the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child

Labor report, "developed economies" equates to the ILO's classification of "industrial market economies," "economies in transition" to "transition economies," "developing economies" to "industrializing economies," and "the least developed countries" equates to "less developed countries." Countries that appear on both "developing countries" and "least developed countries" lists are considered "least developed countries" for calculating a "sufficient number" of labor inspectors. (93)

Number of Labor Inspectors

Article 10 of ILO C. 81 calls for a "sufficient number" of inspectors to do the work required. Because each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a sufficient number of inspectors. The factors that need to be considered include the number and size of establishments, and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient; however, in many countries, the available data sources are weak. The ratio of inspectors per workforce is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach 1:10,000 in industrial market economies, 1:15,000 in industrializing economies, 1:20,000 in transition economies, and 1:40,000 in less developed countries. (94)

ILO Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations

The ILO CEACR examines and makes two types of comments on the application of international labor standards by states that are party to the relevant conventions. Direct requests contain the Committee's technical comments or questions about the state's application of a particular convention, and these requests are sent directly to governments. Observations, which are published in the Committee's annual report, contain comments on fundamental questions raised by a state's application of a particular convention and recommendations for the state. (101)

Glossary of Other Terms

Basic Education

Article 7(c) of ILO C. 182 requires countries to "ensure access to free basic education." According to the International Standard Classification of Education, "basic education" corresponds to the first 9 years of formal schooling and comprises primary and lower secondary education. Primary education is considered to be the first stage of basic education and covers 6 years of full-time schooling, with the legal age of entrance normally being no younger than age 5 or older than age 7. Primary education is designed to give pupils a sound basis in reading, writing, and mathematics, along with an elementary understanding of other subjects, such as history, geography, natural science, social science, religion, art, and music. Lower secondary education is more subject-focused and requires specialized teachers. It corresponds to about 3 years of schooling. Basic education also can include various non-formal and informal public and private educational activities offered to meet the defined basic learning needs of groups of people of all ages.

Article 13 of the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights indicates that primary education should be compulsory and free to all. Secondary education, including technical and vocational education, should be available and accessible to all, and free education should be progressively introduced. Article 28 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child affirms the right of the child to an education and the state's duty to ensure that primary education is free and compulsory. (5; 96; 97; 98)

Bonded Labor, Debt Bondage

Bonded labor or debt bondage is "the status or condition arising from a pledge by a debtor of his personal services or those of a person under his control as security for a debt if the value of those services as reasonably assessed is not applied towards the liquidation of the debt or the length and nature of those services are not respectively limited and defined," as defined in the UN Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery (1956). (73)

Bonded labor typically occurs when a person who needs a loan and has no security to offer pledges their labor, or that of someone under their control, as security for a loan. In some cases, the interest on the loan may be so high that it cannot be paid. In others, it may be deemed that the bonded individual's work repays the interest on the loan but not the principal. Thus, the loan is inherited and perpetuated, and becomes an inter-generational debt. (100)

Bonded labor is prohibited as one of the worst forms of child labor in ILO C. 182. (5)

Child Domestic Worker

A "child domestic worker" works in third-party private households under an employment relationship and engages in various tasks that include cleaning, cooking, gardening, collecting water, and caring for children and the elderly. Child domestic workers sometimes have live-in arrangements, whereby they live in their employer's household and work in exchange for room, board, and sometimes education. Child domestic workers are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including sexual, physical, and verbal abuse, in large part because they often depend on their employers for basic needs and work in locations hidden from public view. (101; 102)

Child Labor Elimination Projects

Since 1995, USDOL has funded over 350 projects in 99 countries. USDOL currently oversees more than $274 million in active programming to combat exploitative child labor. To date, USDOL-funded projects have provided nearly 2 million children with education and vocational training opportunities as a strategy for preventing and reducing child labor and increasing access to education in disadvantaged communities. (103)

Child Trafficking

The Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children (Palermo Protocol) provides a definition of human trafficking for children that states “the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring or receipt of a child for the purpose of exploitation shall be considered ‘trafficking in persons’ even if this does not involve any of the means set forth in subparagraph (a) of this Article.” As such, there does not need to be abuse of power, control, coercion, or fraud present to constitute child trafficking, as the definition for adults requires. The Palermo Protocol provides a commonly accepted definition of human trafficking in Article 3(a) that trafficking in persons means “the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring or receipt of persons, by means of the threat or use of force or other forms of coercion, of abduction, of fraud, of deception, of the abuse of power or of a position of vulnerability, or of the giving or receiving of payments or benefits to achieve the consent of a person having control over another person, for the purpose of exploitation. Exploitation shall include, at a minimum, the exploitation of the prostitution of others or other forms of sexual exploitation, forced labor or services, slavery or practices similar to slavery, servitude or the removal of organs.” (104)

The trafficking of children is prohibited as a worst form of child labor in ILO C. 182, Article 3(a). (5)

Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children

Based on the 1996 Declaration and Agenda for Action of the First World Congress Against the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, commercial sexual exploitation of children (CSEC) is defined as “sexual abuse by the adult and remuneration in cash or kind to the child or third person or persons.” (88) The remuneration dynamic distinguishes CSEC from the sexual abuse of a child, which does not include commercial gain; however, sexual exploitation also includes abuse. The definition of CSEC includes these activities:

- Prostitution in the streets or indoors, and in such places as brothels, discotheques, massage parlors, bars, hotels, and restaurants;
- Child sex tourism;
- The production, promotion, and distribution of pornography involving children; and
- The use of children in sex shows (public or private).

ILO C. 182, Article 3(b), prohibits using, procuring, or offering a child for prostitution or for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. (5)

Compulsory Education Age

The age up to which children and youth are legally required to attend school. (98)

Convention on the Rights of the Child

The Convention on the Rights of the Child spells out the basic rights of children, such as the right to survival; to develop to the fullest; to be protected from harmful influences, abuse, and exploitation; and to participate fully in family, cultural, and social life. The Convention protects children's rights by setting standards in health care; education; and legal, civil, and social services. According to Article 32 of the Convention, children have the right “to be protected from economic exploitation and from performing any work that is likely to be hazardous or to interfere with the child's education, or to be harmful to the child's health or physical, mental, spiritual, moral, or social development.” (105)

Hazardous Work

Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182 sets forth the following as a worst form of child labor: “work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children." This is colloquially referred to as "hazardous work." Countries must determine which types of work are considered to be hazardous work by law or regulation. ILO R. 190 includes options for consideration in determining which types of work are hazardous.

ILO Recommendation No. 190: Worst Forms of Child Labor

ILO R. 190 supplements the provisions of ILO C. 182 and provides guidance to ratifying countries regarding its implementation. It provides guidelines to assist countries in determining what types of work should be considered hazardous and thus what type of work countries should prohibit for all children as a worst form of child labor, in accordance with Article 4 of ILO C. 182. ILO R. 190 describes populations in need of specific attention regarding the worst forms of child labor, such as girls and children involved in hidden forms of work. It also provides guidance regarding specific steps that countries which have ratified ILO C. 182 should take to combat the worst forms of child labor, such as the collection and exchange of data on both the problem and best practices to address it; passage and enforcement of laws that penalize violations with criminal penalties; awareness raising about the problem; establishment of policies against the worst forms of child labor; and international cooperation through technical, legal, and other forms of assistance. (106)

Illicit Activities

ILO C. 182, Article 3(c), prohibits "the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs." Illicit activities in this context can include crimes; however, the activity need not be illegal to be considered illicit. (5) According to ILO R. 190 and the General Survey on the Fundamental Conventions Concerning Rights at Work, illicit activities can include "activities which involve the unlawful carrying or use of firearms or other weapons," and "the use of children by criminal organizations for transporting weapons and carrying out arson attacks or destroying public or private property, illicit activities such as housebreaking and petty theft, and children being engaged by adults in car breaking, housebreaking, selling drugs and selling stolen goods, use of children for forced or organized begging, gambling, the unlawful carrying or use of firearms or other weapons, or for the commission of an offence or a crime using violence or the threat of violence." (106)

Informal Sector

While the concept of the informal sector was introduced into international usage in the 1970s, it was only in 1993 at the 15th ICLS that an internationally recognized definition was established for data collection to delineate the "informal sector" as unincorporated, small, or unregistered enterprises, and the employees of those enterprises. An enterprise is unincorporated if no complete set of accounts are available that would permit a financial separation of the activities of the enterprise from that of its owners, and it produces marketable goods or services. The registration and size criteria are determined according to national circumstances and legislation, which provide a degree of flexibility in identifying the informal sector from country to country. However, all interpretations of this sector share the notion of enterprises whose activities are not covered or are insufficiently covered by law, or whose activities are not covered by law in practice, meaning that the relevant law is not applied or enforced. Workers in such enterprises often lack the benefits of regular, stable, and protected employment. Because employers in the informal sector are generally either not covered by labor laws or are not held accountable for complying with labor protections, including occupational safety measures, children who work in "hazardous" informal settings likely face increased risk of exploitation, including injury. In addition, because businesses in the informal sector are not usually included in official statistics, children working in informal sector enterprises may not be counted in labor force activity rates. (108; 109)

Light Work

This report uses the definition of light work as established in ILO C. 138, Minimum Age for Admission to Employment. Under Article 7(1) of the Convention, "National laws or regulations may permit the employment or work of persons 13 to 15 years of age on light work which is (a) not likely to be harmful to their health or development; and (b) not such as to prejudice their attendance at school, their participation in vocational orientation or training programmes approved by the competent authority, or their capacity to benefit from the instruction received." Countries that have specified a minimum legal working age of 14 may permit the employment or work of persons ages 12 to 14 in light work as defined in Article 7(1). Under Article 7(2), countries may also permit the employment in light work of children who are at least age 15 but have not yet completed compulsory schooling. Countries permitting light work under Article 7 must specify limitations on their hours of work, as well as activities and conditions in which light work may be undertaken. (76)

Minimum Age for Work

The minimum age for work is the age at which a child can enter into work. ILO C. 138 states that the minimum age for admission to employment should not be less than the age of completion of compulsory schooling and should not be less than age 15, or age 14 for developing countries that specified a minimum legal age of 14 upon ratification of ILO C. 138. (76)

Non-Formal Education

Non-formal education is any organized educational activity outside of the established formal school system—whether operating separately or as an important feature of some broader activity—that is intended to serve identifiable learning objectives. Non-formal or transitional education programs can enable former child workers to catch up or be mainstreamed with their peers who began their schooling at the appropriate age. (97)

Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict

This optional UN protocol, adopted in 2000, addresses and commits ratifying countries to take action against the involvement of children in armed conflict, which is a worst form of child labor per ILO C. 182, Article 3(a). (110)

Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography

This optional UN protocol, adopted in 2000, addresses and commits ratifying countries to prohibit the commercial sexual exploitation of children, which is a worst form of child labor as defined in ILO C. 182, Article 3(b). (111)

Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper (PRSP)

This document is written by the government of a developing country with the participation of civil society to serve as the basis for concessional lending from the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, as well as debt relief under the World Bank's Highly Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. A poverty reduction strategy paper (PRSP) should be used to measure poverty in the country, identify goals for reducing poverty, and create a spending and policy program for reaching those goals. A PRSP also should ensure that a country's macroeconomic, structural, and social policies are consistent with the objectives of poverty reduction and social development. A new PRSP must be written every 3 years to continue receiving assistance from international financial institutions such as the World Bank. (112)

Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention Against Transnational Organized Crime (Palermo Protocol)

The Palermo Protocol supplements the UN Convention Against Transnational Organized Crime and covers the trafficking of children, also delineated as a worst form of child labor under ILO C. 182, Article 3(a). (5) See "Child Trafficking" above.

Ratification

Ratification is a serious undertaking whereby a state formally accepts the terms of an international agreement, thus becoming legally bound to apply it. Other ways of becoming bound to an international agreement include acceptance, approval, accession, signature, or through an exchange of notes.

To ratify an agreement, a country must formally deposit the instruments of ratification with the appropriate depositary. In the case of ILO conventions, ratifications must be registered with the Director-General of the ILO. (118)

For certain international agreements that require ratification, signing an agreement or enacting an agreement into domestic law by congress, or a similar state organ, does not mean that the international agreement has been ratified. Signing an international agreement serves as a preliminary endorsement, albeit a formality, because signatories are not bound by the terms of the international agreement or in any way committed to proceed to the final step of ratification. However, a signatory is obliged to refrain from acts that would defeat the objective and purpose of the international agreement, unless it makes clear its intention not to become a party to the international agreement. Appropriate state entities may signal approval of an international agreement; however, that is only one of the requisite steps on the path toward official ratification. The final step requires that the instruments of ratification be submitted to the ILO's depositary. (118)

In the case of ILO conventions, ILO procedures provide the option of ratifying or not ratifying a convention, but they do not include the option of signing a convention as a preliminary endorsement. Generally, an ILO convention comes into force in a ratifying country 12 months after the government has deposited the requisite instrument of ratification. This grace period provides ILO members time to enact or modify legislation to comply with the convention before it comes into force. (118)

Slavery

Slavery is the status or condition of a person over whom any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership are exercised. (72)

Unpaid Household Services

For this report, the term "unpaid household services by children" refers to the domestic and personal services a child performs within the child's own household, under the following conditions: (1) for long hours; (2) in an unhealthy environment, including equipment or heavy loads; or (3) in dangerous locations. (68)

Appendix 8:

Research Framework and Organization of TDA Country Profiles

Research Methods

This section describes the research methods used for data collection, as well as the sources, analysis of information, and the limitations of these methods in this report.

Data Collection and Sources

Information was gathered for this report through desk research, U.S. embassy reporting, and limited fieldwork. Information also was received from some foreign governments. Desk research consisted of an extensive review of mostly online materials, which included both primary and secondary sources. The sources included academic and independent researchers, media outlets, NGOs, international organizations, foreign governments, and U.S. government agencies. Information also was collected from U.S. government-funded technical assistance and field research projects.

Examples of the sources used in this report are the most recent available editions of country laws relevant to child labor; national-level child labor surveys; NGO reports on the nature of child labor in various countries; and UN reports, including direct requests and observations by the ILO Committee of Experts. (94)

The U.S. Department of State and U.S. embassies and consulates abroad provided important information by gathering data from contacts, conducting site visits, and reviewing local media sources. A request for information from the public was published in the Federal Register, and a copy of the request was mailed to the Washington, D.C.-based foreign embassies of the countries included in this report. (115) Data also were gathered through key informant interviews.

Analysis of Information

The existence of child labor, particularly in its worst forms, often involves violations of laws and regulations, including serious criminal violations in some egregious cases. Information on child labor may be intentionally suppressed. Victims of the worst forms of child labor often are unable to claim their rights or even communicate the abuse they are suffering because they are traumatized, unaware of their rights under the law, or politically underrepresented or marginalized. These factors make information on the worst forms of child labor difficult to obtain. Therefore, to compile a credible and comprehensive report, ILAB used the following criteria to assess information:

Nature of the information

Whether the information about child labor and government efforts to combat it gathered from research, public submissions, or other sources was relevant and probative, and covered the "worst forms of child labor" and "government efforts" as used in this report. Specific evidence of government efforts was preferred when it was available.

Date of the information

Whether the source information about child labor was no more than 5 years old. More current information was given priority, and to the extent possible, ILAB used sources published during the reporting period. Information from sources older than 5 years was generally not considered.

In the case of child labor statistics, however, certain factors contribute to less frequent generation of new data. Because government and other efforts to address exploitative child labor take time to have an impact on national-level rates of child labor, children's involvement in such activities does not change dramatically from year to year. Child labor surveys are carried out infrequently, in part, because the child labor picture does not change frequently, although the number of surveys has increased recently. To present an overall picture of children's work in as many countries as possible, ILAB used statistics that are, in some cases, more than 10 years old (from 2011) as of the writing of this report. For more information on the statistics used in this report, see "Children's Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions" in Appendix 7.

In addition, in cases in which previous editions of this report have asserted that the worst forms of child labor exist in the production of goods, and in the absence of evidence that the problem has been effectively eliminated, sources more than 5 years old may be used. This practice makes the report's information on such forms of child labor consistent with USDOL's List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor, as mandated by the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2005 (TVPPRA). Statements that the worst forms of child labor exist in the production of goods will be removed when there is evidence that the problem has been effectively eliminated.

Source of the information

Whether the information, either from primary or secondary sources, was from a source in which methodology, prior publications, degree of familiarity and experience with international labor standards, or reputation for accuracy and objectivity warranted a determination that it was relevant and probative.

Extent of the corroboration

Whether the information about the use of child labor was corroborated by other sources.

Limitations

While data on the worst forms of child labor and information about government efforts to provide remediation are improving, data are still insufficient to provide a complete understanding of the problem. A lack of information may create the impression that a country has less serious problems with the worst forms of child labor than it actually has. At the same time, a dearth of information may create the impression that a government is doing less than it should when, in fact, efforts to combat child labor exist, but are simply unreported or unpublicized. Although countries with open and available information may sometimes appear to have greater problems relative to other countries, this may not be the case. In fact, countries that collect information on child labor are in a better position to eliminate the problem than countries in which such information is suppressed, because with better information, they can target their policies and programs toward identified problem areas to achieve maximum impact.

Due to an inability to travel to each country covered in the report, ILAB relies on U.S. embassies, internet research, and submissions received in response to the Federal Register notice to gather primary and secondary sources of information. For countries where Internet access and technology are limited, there may be less information available online. Countries with more closed government processes and less civil society participation also may have less information readily available. When ILAB was unable to find information about report topics, including the content of important laws or enforcement efforts, this was noted in the report.

Most of ILAB's online research was conducted in English; however, we also gathered and read source materials written in Spanish, French, and, to a limited extent, Portuguese, Russian, and Arabic. Materials written in other languages were generally not reviewed.

Despite ILAB's best efforts to cover relevant topics as comprehensively as possible, this report cannot address every salient issue that may affect children's involvement in child labor. For example, there are many factors that affect whether a household sends a child to school, to work, or both. A lack of available information, however, limits the discussion of these issues for some countries. In these cases, we note that the profile's information is incomplete. Furthermore, ILAB chose to limit its reporting of education to the issue of access, and generally does not cover the quality of education because research on the relationship between the quality of education and child labor is lacking.

Organization and Content of Country Profiles

ILAB organized country profiles to track the types of efforts outlined in the TDA Conference Committee report. In this report, the Conference Committee indicated that the President should consider certain criteria when determining whether a country has met its obligation under the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) program to implement its international commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. (1) Each country profile contains an introductory paragraph that provides an assessment of government actions to advance efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor, six sections that describe the problem and different aspects of government efforts to address it, and a set of suggested actions. The following section describes the content in the country profiles.

Content of Country Profiles

Each country profile begins with an overview of 2021 in a single paragraph, beginning with a statement identifying the assessment level assigned to the country for 2021. Following the statement of assessment, the summary includes meaningful efforts taken by a government to implement its commitment to eliminating child labor. The summary also notes where children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, or if no worst forms of child labor exist, where they are engaged in tasks for which there is evidence that such tasks fall into the categories suggested by ILO R. 190 for hazardous work—referred to as “dangerous tasks” in this report. Depending on the situation in the country, the summary also may discuss child labor that does not rise to the level of hazardous work. Finally, the paragraph highlights areas in which key gaps in government efforts remain.

Section I: Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of Child Labor

The first section of each country profile attempts to provide, to the extent that information is available, a comprehensive picture of child labor in the country. This section begins with a review of available data on working children and school attendance, followed by a presentation of the most common sectors and activities in which children are engaged. The narrative also provides information about the nature and conditions of the work, specific populations that are particularly vulnerable to child labor, government complicity in the use of forced child labor, circumstances that make accessing education difficult, and events during the year that destabilized the country.

Section II: Legal Framework for Child Labor

The second section of each country profile provides information on whether the country has adequate laws and regulations proscribing the worst forms of child labor. This section describes a country's legal framework with regard to child labor and assesses the adequacy of that legal framework by comparing it, in general, to the standards set forth in ILO C. 182 and ILO C. 138, and to other international instruments, including the Palermo Protocol and the Convention on the Rights of the Child and its Optional Protocols. ILAB considered whether the laws criminally prohibited the categorical worst forms of child labor in ILO C. 182, Articles 3(a)–(c), as suggested by ILO R. 190. In line with the ILO

Committee of Experts, ILAB considered any law that could be used to prohibit child labor, including its worst forms. ILAB also considered whether the country had ratified key international instruments related to child labor.

It is important to note that ILAB analyzes a country's legal framework regarding compliance with international standards, regardless of whether a problem exists in a country. This is to ensure that legal frameworks also serve as preventive mechanisms. For example, even in the case of a country that does not have a problem with the use of children in illicit activities, if there are no laws to prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, the report points out a gap when comparing laws on this issue against international standards.

The corresponding table indicates where the legal framework meets international standards and where it does not. For example, the table indicates whether the country's minimum age for work complies with the international standard.

ILAB assessed whether a country has created a hazardous work list and whether the types of hazardous work prohibited are comprehensive, based on whether there is evidence that children engage in work in which, according to ILO R. 190, the work may be hazardous. Because the standards on the minimum age for work in ILO C. 138 provide a foundation for protections against the worst forms of child labor, ILAB used the standards embodied in that convention to assess each country's minimum age for admission to work and the age up to which education is compulsory. (76) ILO C. 138 establishes that countries should set a minimum age of 15 for work, or age 14 for countries with less-developed economies where the country has specified an age of 14 upon ratification of the convention. For countries that permit children to engage in light work, the profile also indicates whether the country has set a minimum age of 13 for light work, or age 12 for less-developed economies, and whether legislation related to light work determines permitted activities, and the number of hours per week and the conditions under which light work may be conducted.

ILAB assessed whether a country's laws prohibit forced labor, human trafficking, and debt bondage. For child trafficking specifically, ILAB reviewed the adequacy of existing legal protections related to international and domestic trafficking for both commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor against the Palermo Protocol's standard for child trafficking, including whether the legal protections prohibit the five elements of the human trafficking process—recruiting, harboring, transporting, transferring, and receiving persons.

For the issue of commercial sexual exploitation of children, ILAB assessed whether a country's laws criminally prohibit the using, procuring, and offering of children for prostitution; the production of child pornography; and the use of children in pornographic performances. For illicit activities, ILAB assessed whether laws criminally prohibit the using, procuring, and offering of a child in the production and trafficking of drugs.

In all cases in which countries maintain a military force, ILAB assessed whether the country prohibited the compulsory military recruitment of children and whether the minimum age for voluntary military recruitment is at least age 16, with certain safeguards to ensure voluntariness. For all countries, ILAB assessed whether the recruitment of children under age 18 by non-state armed groups is prohibited, even if non-state armed groups are not present in the country.

ILAB assessed whether the age for compulsory education aligns with the minimum age for work, in accordance with ILO C. 138, which states that the minimum age for work should not be less than the age up to which education is compulsory, and that it should be at least age 15, or age 14 for developing countries. However, the opposite situation—in which the minimum age for work is higher than the upper cut-off age for compulsory education—also should be avoided because when children are not required to be in school or permitted to work, they are susceptible to the worst forms of child labor.

Section III: Enforcement of Laws on Child Labor

The third section of the country profiles addresses the second and third criteria included in the TDA Conference Committee report concerning whether the country has “adequate laws and regulations for the implementation and enforcement of such measures,” and has “established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor.” (1) This section describes the role of government agencies in enforcing laws relevant to child labor, including its worst forms, and reports on labor law and criminal law enforcement efforts during the reporting period.

In this section, ILAB analyzes whether and to what degree the country defines enforcement agency roles and investigates and addresses complaints related to allegations of child labor. Because ILO C. 182 only discusses enforcement to a limited extent, other international standards and practices also are considered as general evaluation guidelines, including from ILO C. 81 and ILO C. 129 on Labor Inspection and Labor Inspection in Agriculture, respectively. To the extent possible, ILAB assesses whether the country has taken these actions:

- Established labor inspection systems, including a functioning labor inspectorate.
- Provided sufficient funding and resources to enforce child labor laws and regulations.
- Employed a sufficient number of inspectors, according to the ILO’s technical advice, to enforce the country’s child labor laws and regulations.
- Provided sufficient training for inspectors, including initial training for new employees, training on new laws related to child labor, and refresher courses.

- Developed and implemented an adequate labor inspection strategy that allows for different types of onsite inspections of worksites—such as routine, targeted, complaint-driven, and unannounced—and conducted inspections with sufficient frequency and in all relevant sectors.
- Provided sufficient authority to the labor inspectorate to penalize child labor violations and follow through with sanctions, where appropriate.
- Published information on specific inspection results and fines or sanctions imposed for violation of child labor laws and regulations, including the worst forms of child labor.
- Established a complaint mechanism for labor violations.
- Set up a reciprocal referral mechanism between labor authorities and social services.

Although ILAB researched and requested law enforcement information on the topics for this year’s report, the information was not available in all cases. For example, in many cases, ILAB did not have enough information to determine whether the number of inspectors was sufficient in the country. Only in certain situations, where a country’s government acknowledged that it did not have a sufficient number of labor inspectors or ILAB obtained information indicating that the number of labor inspectors was insufficient relative to the size of the country’s workforce, did ILAB issue findings of insufficiency. In the latter situation, and in determining whether a finding should be included, ILAB considered that the ILO’s technical advice of a ratio of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach 1:10,000 in industrial market economies, 1:15,000 in industrializing economies, 1:20,000 in transition economies, and 1:40,000 in less developed countries. (123)

In addition, ILO R. 190 states that countries should criminally prohibit the categorical worst forms of child labor as set forth in ILO C. 182, Articles 3(a)– (c). Therefore, the report also assesses whether criminal law enforcement in the country has taken these actions:

- Established criminal investigation systems.
- Provided sufficient funding and resources to enforce the worst forms of child labor laws and regulations.
- Provided sufficient training for investigators, including initial training for new employees, training on new laws related to the worst forms of child labor, and refresher courses.
- Conducted a sufficient number of investigations related to the worst forms of child labor.
- Published information on specific investigation results and violations, prosecutions, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.
- Imposed penalties for violations related to the worst forms of child labor.
- Established a reciprocal referral mechanism between criminal authorities and social services.

Section IV: Coordination of Government Efforts on Child Labor

The fourth section of the country profiles also addresses the third criterion included in the TDA Conference Committee report—whether the country has established “formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor.” (1) This section provides information on key institutions in the country charged with coordinating overall efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms. Although the TDA Conference Committee report speaks only to whether such mechanisms are in place with regard to investigation and complaints of the worst forms of child labor, ILO C. 182, Article 5, states that “[e]ach Member shall, after consultation with employers’ and workers’ organizations, establish or designate appropriate mechanisms to monitor the implementation of the provisions giving effect to this Convention.” ILAB applied this concept of monitoring to all provisions of the Convention, not just those directly related to the enforcement of child labor laws. However, because the term “monitor” is often associated exclusively with enforcement activities, ILAB uses the term “coordinate” to describe this function.

Section V: Government Policies on Child Labor

The fifth section of the country profiles provides information on the fourth criterion in the TDA Conference Committee report—whether the country has “a comprehensive policy for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor.” (1) This section describes a country’s key policies and plans to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

ILAB used the framework provided in ILO R. 190, Article 15(f), which illustrates measures that countries might take to combat the worst forms of child labor, such as “encouraging the development of policies by undertakings to promote the aims of the Convention.” (106) In ILO C. 182 and in comments from the ILO Committee of Experts, the terms “programs” and “plans of action” are often used interchangeably. Indeed, in some cases, it is difficult to distinguish among “a policy,” “a plan,” or “a program.” (5) For the TDA Conference Committee report, a policy on child labor is defined as a framework that lays out general principles that are intended to guide a government’s actions on child labor. Although policies may call for the passage of new laws and the establishment of new programs, the actual adoption of laws and program implementation are reported in the “Legal Framework for the Worst Forms of Child Labor” or the “Social Programs to Address Child Labor” sections of the profiles.

Specifically, ILAB assessed whether governments have achieved the following activities:

- Established specific child labor policies, any related development policies that explicitly incorporate the issue of child labor, or any related development policies that do not explicitly target child labor but that could have an impact on the problem. (ILAB determined that because so few governments distinguish between worst forms of child labor and child labor, any policy on child labor, whether targeted toward the worst forms of child labor or not, would be reported).

- Ensured that these policies include specific action plans, assign responsibilities, establish goals, and set timetables.
- Implemented established policies and plans.

Section VI: Social Programs to Address Child Labor

The sixth section of each country profile provides information on the fifth criterion in the TDA Conference Committee report—whether social programs exist in the country “to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor and assist in the removal of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor.” (1) This section of the country profiles reports on key programs focused on child labor and the worst forms of child labor because countries often do not distinguish between the two when creating child labor programs. This section of the profiles also reports on programs that focus on child labor specifically, and programs that address poverty, education, and other related matters that could have a beneficial impact on child labor. Only programs launched or implemented during the reporting period are included in this section.

ILAB generally considers the implementation of projects through international organizations to be government efforts because the projects can be carried out only with the consent of the government, and such efforts are sometimes considered part of a country’s national budget.

ILAB applied the standards embodied in Articles 6 and 7 of ILO C. 182 to assess country programs to combat child labor. ILO R. 190 also is considered to determine the types of efforts that governments might make, such as giving special attention to girls, providing training to employers and workers, and raising awareness. With this in mind, ILAB assesses whether governments have taken the following actions:

- Participated in any social programs to combat child labor, including programs aimed at directly preventing and withdrawing children from participation in child labor.
- Implemented social programs with sufficient resources to combat the scope and magnitude of the child labor problem at issue.
- Targeted at-risk populations.
- Implemented social programs successfully and sustainably.

Section VII: Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

The last section of the country profiles is a set of suggested actions. These suggested actions serve as a roadmap of efforts that individual countries can follow to more fully address the worst forms of child labor. The year in which a suggested action was first provided is listed in the table, followed by every year in which the action was included in the report and not addressed.

Framework for Country Assessments

Objective for Country Assessments

ILAB is using an assessment tool to clearly indicate and highlight the status of efforts by each country that benefits from U.S. trade preferences to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

Research Question Guiding Country Assessments

The research question that ILAB is asking in its assessment of an individual beneficiary country is “To what extent did the beneficiary country advance efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period?”

Scope of Country Assessment

As discussed, the TDA Conference Committee report outlines the following six criteria that the President is asked to consider in determining whether a country is implementing its international commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor:

- Whether the country has adequate laws and regulations proscribing the worst forms of child labor;
- Whether the country has adequate laws and regulations for the implementation and enforcement of such measures;
- Whether the country has established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints related to allegations of the worst forms of child labor;
- Whether the country has a comprehensive policy for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor;
- Whether social programs exist in the country to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor and assist in the removal of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor; and
- Whether the country is making continual progress toward eliminating the worst forms of child labor.

The country assessment tool is intended to inform the sixth criterion—whether the country is “making continual progress toward eliminating the worst forms of child labor.” In preparing the assessments, ILAB evaluated the first five criteria, grouping them into the same five areas addressed in the individual country profiles: laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs. The assessment is based on an analysis of the status of each country’s efforts in these five areas considered as a whole and compared to the country’s prior efforts. The assessments do not take into account the impact of government actions on the problem, or whether they have a documented effect on eliminating child labor. This type of analysis would require rigorous impact evaluations and assessments based on data from solid research designs, which is beyond the scope of this report. It is important to note that the assessment is not intended to reflect a determination of “whether a country has implemented its commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.” That determination is reserved for the President.

Method for Determining a Country Assessment

Each country profile in this report identifies a set of suggested actions for governments to take to advance its efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The implementation—or lack of implementation—of these suggested actions establishes a baseline or point of reference from which to assess a country’s advancement. These actions, in combination with other efforts undertaken by a country, were considered when assessing the level of a country’s advancement during the current reporting period and in comparison with the previous reporting period.

After identifying and assessing a country’s efforts, ILAB considered the significance of the efforts undertaken during the reporting period—actions that could have an impact on eliminating the worst forms of child labor, and the extent to which these efforts addressed the first five TDA criteria, outlined above, in a limited or meaningful manner during the reporting period. In addition, ILAB reviewed whether the government established or failed to remedy a regressive or significantly detrimental law, policy, or practice that delayed advancement in eliminating child labor. Finally, ILAB also examined whether countries had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in forced child labor in more than isolated incidents at the national, regional, or local level.

To promote consistency and transparency, and to operationalize these first five TDA criteria, each country’s efforts were analyzed according to a uniform set of guidance questions related to the five general areas of laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs. Detailed information is given in “TDA Guidance Questions.”

Country Profiles

In 2021, Afghanistan made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Officials in Afghanistan arrested, detained, and prosecuted children for terrorism-related crimes during the reporting period, including some younger than age 12 who had been forcibly recruited by non-state armed groups. Furthermore, authorities considered some child trafficking victims, especially those engaged in bacha bazi or armed conflict, as criminals, housing them in juvenile detention centers and subjecting them to torture and other forms of ill treatment rather than referring them to victim support services. Children in Afghanistan are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict, forced labor in the production of bricks and carpets, and commercial sexual exploitation. Afghanistan lacks a mechanism to impose penalties for child labor violations and lacks sufficient programs to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. In addition, Afghan law does not sufficiently criminalize forced labor, debt bondage, or the commercial sexual exploitation of girls.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Afghanistan are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict, forced labor in the production of bricks and carpets, and in commercial sexual exploitation. (1,2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Afghanistan.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In August 2021, the Taliban took control of Kabul and declared the establishment of an “Islamic Emirate” throughout the country. The U.S. government does not recognize the Taliban as the government of Afghanistan, and their non-recognized status has precluded normal communications between the U.S. government and Afghan officials on the matter of child labor. (11,40) The closure of the U.S. Embassy in Kabul and absence of a diplomatic presence in Kabul since August further hampered access to information regarding the prevalence and type of child labor that continued in the country. (41)

Since the group’s takeover, Taliban representatives have indicated the group’s readiness to take steps to reduce child labor and trafficking, including through international coordination. (41) Nonetheless, reporting showed that the subsequent humanitarian crisis, which resulted in food insecurity, displacement, and deteriorating economic conditions, resulted in an increase in the prevalence of the worst forms of child labor. (11,42,43) In addition, the COVID-19 pandemic and drought conditions further exacerbated child labor in the country. (11,42,44)

Children in Afghanistan are recruited and used as child soldiers. (45,46) During the reporting period, at least 58 boys were recruited as child soldiers by the Taliban, government entities under the Ghani administration, such as the Afghan National Police (ANP), or pro-government militias. (46) Moreover, in 2021, the Haqqani Network, Gulbuddin Hekmatyar’s Hizb-I Islami, and the Islamic State of Iraq and the Khorasan Province were all found to have recruited child soldiers in Afghanistan. (47) Low rates of birth registration and the falsification of identity documents contributed to the prevalence of child soldiers by making it difficult to determine a recruit’s age. (48,49) Observers reported that some officials accepted bribes to produce false identity documents that indicated that the recipient boys were older than age 18. (29,48) Even newly introduced biometrics efforts have not enabled Child Protection Units (CPUs) to entirely restrict children from enlisting in the police force. (48) Despite recruitment occurring within official government entities, Afghanistan has never prosecuted military or police officials for facilitating the recruitment or use of child soldiers. (45)

Afghanistan is a source and destination country for child trafficking. (10,12,14,25) Worsening economic and humanitarian conditions in Afghanistan following the Taliban’s August takeover increased children’s vulnerability to child marriage and trafficking, making them more susceptible to the worst forms of child labor. (41)

Boys in Afghanistan continue to be subjected to commercial sexual exploitation through the practice of bacha bazi, which typically entails keeping a male or transgender child for the purpose of sexual gratification. (11)

Although bacha bazi is prohibited by the Trafficking in Persons Law, the Penal Code, and the Ministry of Defense Protection of Children in Armed Conflict Policy, a significant challenge remains in ensuring accountability. (11,50) Perpetrators of this crime included police commanders, military members, tribal leaders, warlords, members of organized crime groups, clergy, and other men, typically with some authority or financial influence, who conspire to make boys available for sex. (51,52) Research found that, prior to the Taliban takeover, Afghan service members were among the most frequent perpetrators of bacha bazi. (11) In some cases, boys were also forced to serve tea or dance at parties. (53,54) The practice is pervasive in the country, and orphans, runaways, school dropouts, and other marginalized youth are particularly at risk. (29,55) Some boys were sold into the practice by their families or abducted from the street, including by police officers, prior to August 15, 2021. (30,56) Prior to the Taliban takeover, members of the ANP, the Afghan Local Police, the Afghan National Army (ANA), the Afghan Border Police, and checkpoint commanders exploited boys for bacha bazi. (40,45) Children subjected to bacha bazi often become further victimized by the threat of violence when returning to their families, necessitating the placement of these child victims in rehabilitation centers. (11) The suspension of international aid after August 2021 significantly impacted bacha bazi victims' access to rehabilitation services. (42,57,58) According to media and NGO reports, many of these cases went unreported or were referred to traditional mediation, which often allowed perpetrators to re-offend. Cases were further under-reported because the stigma associated with these crimes prevented the vast majority of child victims from bringing cases forward to law enforcement or seeking care, especially when the alleged perpetrators were members of the police force. (59) Afghanistan has prosecuted a limited number of government officers for bacha bazi, including two ANA officers and seven Afghan National Police in 2021. (41)

Girls from impoverished families are often forced into marriage with adult men in order for the girls' families to obtain dowries. These girls are often subsequently forced into carpet weaving and required to provide their earnings to their husbands. (11,42,60,61) Girls are also sold to men in India, Iran, and Pakistan and subsequently exploited sexually or in domestic servitude. (45) Meanwhile, girls from China, Iran, and Pakistan are sometimes trafficked to Afghanistan for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation. (62)

Most human trafficking victims in Afghanistan are children, some of whom are forced into brick production or the production of illegal drugs to settle family debts. (11,29,35) Boys, especially those traveling unaccompanied, were particularly vulnerable to human trafficking, including for work in agriculture and construction. (63,64) Children's families may pay intermediaries to send children for labor abroad, where they are subjected to labor and sex trafficking in Iran, Pakistan, and parts of Europe. (45)

Adults may use their infant children in street begging, while other children migrate unaccompanied to engage in child labor. (11,64,65) Of all the sectors in which Afghan children work, carpet weaving is the sector with the largest number of child laborers, particularly girls between the ages of 11 and 15. (11,66) Many of these children suffer respiratory ailments. (67)

During the reporting period, nearly half of Afghanistan's children did not attend school due to poverty and the effects of conflict; as many as 1.9 million children either engaged in or were subjected to work. (11) Moreover, after August 2021, school-age girls were not allowed to attend classes beyond the sixth grade in most provinces, although universities continued to accept women. (11,41,68) In some cases, Shia Hazara girls faced deliberate militant attacks against their community and girls' schools, limiting their access to education. (69,70) Additional barriers to education for children included displacement of populations due to conflict, the use of schools as military bases, living long distances from schools, school-related fees, lack of security, lack of female teachers in girls' schools, and lack of identity documentation. (2,15,71,72)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Afghanistan has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Afghanistan has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Afghanistan's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including lack of criminal prohibitions against the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

* Country has no conscription (80)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (81)

The Taliban have not made a clear pronouncement on whether the group would follow modified versions of either Afghanistan's 1964 or 2004 constitution until it produced a new constitution, making it unclear the degree to which prior elements of the legal system remained in effect. Simultaneously, the Taliban have conveyed that prior laws remain in effect unless they violate the Taliban interpretation of sharia, as determined by Taliban courts. (40)

The Afghan Labor Law's minimum age provision prohibits those who have not completed age 18 from being "recruited as a worker." (73) However, the law defines "worker" as a person who is "recruited based on a definite contract," meaning that the minimum age provision does not apply to those in informal employment.

Afghan law does not sufficiently criminalize practices similar to slavery, including debt bondage. (73, 74)

The Penal Code explicitly prohibits and sets penalties for the use of male or transgender children for bacha bazi and prohibits the use of girls for prostitution and pornographic performances. However, the legal framework does not adequately criminalize the use of children for the production of pornography. (74,75,77)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

Afghanistan has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Organization/Agency	Role
Child Protection Action Network (CPAN)	Operates as a coalition of agencies, NGOs, and community and religious leaders. Receives complaints of child labor; investigates such cases, refers them to NGO and government shelters that provide social services, and coordinates and provides case management. (2,82) Not all provinces have a CPAN chapter. The capacity of CPAN chapters is not uniform or based on need, and the type of intervention depends on members of a particular CPAN chapter and resources available. (28) Research was unable to determine whether the networks remained active during the reporting period.
Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MoLSA)	Responds to complaints of child labor, child trafficking, and child sexual exploitation; refers cases to the Attorney General's Office (AGO) and NGO shelters; and operates a shelter for trafficking victims in Kabul. (28) Research was unable to determine whether the Kabul shelter remained in operation.
Ministry of Interior	Enforces laws related to child trafficking, the use of children in illicit activities, and child sexual exploitation. (28)
National Directorate of Security	Identifies human trafficking victims and refers these cases to the Ministry of Interior. (28)
Attorney General's Office (AGO)	Investigates and prosecutes human trafficking, abduction, and sexual exploitation cases. (28)

Child Protection Action Network (CPAN) units across the country respond to complaints of child labor, investigate cases, and issue warnings or refer criminal cases to the Attorney General's Office (AGO). However, a person wishing to file a complaint must specify in writing the precise legal statute for the labor violations, making it cumbersome for some citizens to do so. (82) Research also indicates that limited training and resources hinder prompt government response to complaints about child labor. (2)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, research did not find information on whether labor law enforcement agencies in Afghanistan took actions to address child labor. (11)

In 2021, information about the number of labor inspectors was unavailable; however, as of December 2018, the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MoLSA) had 27 inspector positions, 21 of which were filled. (2,5,28) The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Afghanistan's workforce, which includes more than 7.9 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Afghanistan would need to employ roughly 200 labor inspectors. (84) Government officials, NGOs, and UNICEF have previously acknowledged that the number of labor inspectors is insufficient. (2) The international community did not supply additional support to labor inspectors after August. (41) Moreover, sources indicate that labor inspections took place only in the capital, Kabul, prior to the Taliban takeover. It is unclear whether inspections continued after the Taliban takeover in August of 2021. (2,41) Although Afghanistan's labor code designates the MoLSA as the entity with labor law enforcement authority, the Ministry lacks implementing regulations and labor law enforcement funding, leaving inspectors with no mechanism to assess penalties and limited ability to carry out inspections. (70)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, research did not find information on whether criminal law enforcement agencies in Afghanistan took actions to address child labor.

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021

As in years past, it is likely that children used as child soldiers by the Taliban, ISIS-K, and other groups were imprisoned under the Ghani administration without consideration for their age, with no official reintegration program for these child victims. (11)

Child victims of human trafficking are routinely prosecuted and convicted of unlawful acts that traffickers compelled them to commit—and this practice is likely to have continued during the reporting period. (29,85,86) Male victims of child trafficking, especially those engaged in bacha bazi or armed conflict, were sometimes referred to juvenile detention or rehabilitation facilities on criminal charges, instead of being referred to appropriate victim support services. (2,29,34,87) Under the Ghani administration, the government arrested, detained, and prosecuted for terrorism-related crimes children younger than age 12 who had been forcibly recruited by non-state armed groups. Furthermore, authorities housed some child trafficking victims in juvenile detention centers, sometimes for several years. (72) Such children are considered criminals even after being transferred to rehabilitation centers. (29,56) The UN reported that some of these children were subjected to torture and ill treatment. (87,88)

Although information was unavailable for 2021, former government officials previously stated that they lacked equipment and transportation to carry out investigations. (89) In addition, security agencies and the Ministry of Justice did not have a reciprocal referral mechanism to ensure that child victims of human trafficking and other worst forms of child labor receive social services. (2,28)

The Taliban have said that the Ministry of Interior's anti-trafficking in persons offices have been inoperable since the August 15 takeover and that all computer systems, data, and staff in those offices are gone. These offices have yet to be restored as of the end of the reporting period. Due to assistance restrictions, the international community has been able to provide only limited resources to support to child trafficking victims. (41)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

Afghanistan has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including lack of implementation.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission on Protection of Child Rights	Monitors and protects children's rights established under the Law on Protection of Child Rights and strengthens national coordination on child protection. Participants include representatives from the AGO, the Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission, the Ministry of Education, and other bodies. (90,91) Includes an interministerial technical committee, chaired by the MoLSA Minister, to ensure that the Child Act is operational at the provincial and district levels. (90) Research was unable to determine whether this committee was active during the reporting period.
High Commission for Combating Crimes of Abduction and Human Trafficking	Addresses human trafficking in general, including child trafficking. Led by the Ministry of Justice; comprises nine ministries, such as MoLSA, and five other entities. (23,92) Focuses on bacha bazi . (35) Met twice during the reporting period. (2) Research was unable to determine whether this committee was active during the reporting period.
Interministerial Steering Committee on Children and Armed Conflict	Coordinates efforts to eliminate the recruitment and use of child soldiers. Led by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and monitored by the UN and NGOs. (23) Research was unable to determine whether this committee was active during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

Afghanistan has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that may hinder efforts to address child labor, including lack of implementation.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Labor Policy	Includes objectives to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, such as those involving hazardous activities, to pass legislation prohibiting child labor, and effectively enforce child labor laws. (93) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this policy during the reporting period.
National Child Labor Strategy and Action Plan	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2025 and all child labor by 2030. Makes recommendations to improve social protections and oversight. (5) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this policy during the reporting period.
National Anti-Trafficking in Persons Action Plan	Organizes Afghanistan's response to human trafficking, including bacha bazi , with a three-pronged approach: mandates the National Child Protection Committee to find and respond to bacha bazi cases among Afghan civil servants; encourages the implementation of laws, the prevention of child recruitment, and the reporting of corruption by the Ministry of Defense, the Ministry of Interior, and the National Directorate of Security; and oversees the production of annual or semiannual interagency progress reports on addressing trafficking in persons. (94-96) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this policy during the reporting period.
National Strategy for Children at Risk	Creates a framework to provide social services to at-risk children and their families, and guides donors in contributing toward a comprehensive child protection system. Focuses specifically on working children, victims of child trafficking, child soldiers, and other children affected by conflict. (97) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this policy during the reporting period.
Policy for Protection of Children in Armed Conflict	Protects children from recruitment and sexual exploitation in the armed forces and provides services to children rescued from engagement in armed conflict. Assigns the Ministry of Defense and the Afghan National Police (ANP) with monitoring that children's rights are safeguarded and coordinating with CPAN chapters and the Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission. (98) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this policy during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, Afghanistan had programs that include the goal of preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including lack of implementation.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Protection Units (CPUs) of the ANP†	Units located within ANP recruitment centers to ensure that children are not recruited to join armed conflict. Operate in all provinces. (2) CPUs inspect e-tazkeera (ID cards) and compare them against the physical appearance of applicants; however, Afghanistan did not have sufficient CPU reporting channels to identify children, prevent them from joining the security forces, or provide shelter, services, and family reintegration. (99-101) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this program during the reporting period or even possible following the Taliban takeover.
Juvenile Rehabilitation Center†	Provides educational, social, and psychological support, and vocational training in Kabul to children who were previously engaged in armed conflict. (102,103) Nearly 800 children are project participants of the services provided by the Juvenile Rehabilitation Center; according to the Ministry of Justice. (99) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this program during the reporting period.
Asia Regional Child Labor Program (2019–2023)	Funded by ILO and implemented with UNICEF and the Institute for Development Studies, works with Afghanistan to ensure that policies on child labor align with ILO conventions while strengthening local and national Plans of Action. Contains a special focus on internally displaced persons and returnee migrants, along with other groups vulnerable to child labor and human trafficking. (104) ILO stated that activities under this program within Afghanistan were suspended. (41)

REFERENCES ON FILE

In 2021, Albania made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government created the Ministry of State for Youth and Children, which will play a central role in developing programs to promote the well-being of children in Albania. In addition, the government adopted both the new National Agenda on Children's Rights and the National Strategy on Education. However, children in Albania are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including use in illicit activities and forced begging, and in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in mining, including chromium. Albania's legal framework governing child labor does not explicitly prohibit using, procuring, or offering children for illicit activities. In addition, Albania's labor inspectorate does not receive adequate funding to allow for inspections in all sectors in which child labor is known to occur.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Albania are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including use in illicit activities and forced begging, and in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children in Albania are also subjected to mining, including chromium. (1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Albania.

	Forced begging (6,9,15,19,20,22,23,25,26)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Albania is a source country for child trafficking, especially of girls. Children are also sometimes forced into labor, such as begging and scavenging, by human traffickers and by their own families. (3,7) To contribute to family income, some Roma and Balkan Egyptian children are forced to engage in street begging or the collection of recyclables. (7,27) Children are also subjected to trafficking, both domestic and abroad to EU countries, for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor. (7) In addition, some children informally scavenge chromium around hazardous mines where debris from mine tunnels is found, and they sometimes carry these heavy rocks for miles. (7,11,12) Domestic child trafficking and forced begging have continued in recent years, particularly during the tourist season. (28) Albania lacks recent, comprehensive data on child labor, including in the agriculture and construction sectors. (7)

Children in Albania face a number of barriers to accessing education. Lack of access to education increases children’s vulnerability to child labor. (7) Although Albania allows children without a birth certificate to enroll in public schools, some children from Roma and Balkan Egyptian families and refugees without proper birth documentation may still face obstacles in obtaining access to social services and education. (7) Roma and Balkan Egyptian children also experience discrimination in schools and were placed in separate classrooms, and faced other hurdles to accessing education, such as a lack of access to reliable transportation. (7,29) In addition, some migrant and refugee children from Syria, Algeria, and Libya face difficulties accessing education due to language barriers. (2,30) Children with disabilities also continue to experience discrimination and other hurdles to accessing inclusive education. (7,31) Children not in school are more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Albania has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Albania’s legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the failure to prohibit the use of children in illicit activities.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 98 of the Code of Labor: Article 24 of the Law for the Protection of the Rights of the Child (32,33)

Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Articles 99–101 of the Code of Labor; Decree of the Council of Ministers on Defining Hazardous and Hard Works: Article 34 of the Law on Occupational Safety and Health at Work; Regulation on Protection of Children at Work (32,31-35)

Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	N/A*		Article 9 of the Law on Military Service (37)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Article 28 of the Law for the Protection of the Rights of the Child (33)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 22 of the Law on Pre-University Education System (38)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 57 of the Constitution of the Republic of Albania: Article 5 of the Law on Pre-University Education System (38,39)

* No conscription (37)

The law in Albania does not explicitly prohibit using, procuring, or offering children under age 18 for illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs. Article 129 of the Criminal Code only prohibits inducing or encouraging children under age 14 to participate in criminality. (36) Additionally, Article 25 of the Law for the Protection of the Rights of the Child does provide for protection of children against usage of alcohol and drugs, as well as the illicit production and trafficking of these substances, but does not criminalize inducing a child to participate in these acts. (33) The law also does not criminally prohibit the use of children for prostitution. (36)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Finance, Economy, and Labor	Enforces laws related to child labor and hazardous work and monitors the quality of social services provided by the State Inspectorate for Labor and Social Services (SILSS). Receives and responds to child labor complaints through the State Social Services Agency. (7) Child Protection Units (CPUs) are the responsible agencies at the municipal level and identify at-risk children, conduct initial evaluations of each case, and refer children to appropriate social services. (7,40)
Ministry of Interior	Enforces laws related to the worst forms of child labor through protection officers. (9,41) Coordinates operations of the Border Police and each of the Illicit Human Trafficking sections in the country's 12 Regional Police Directorates through the General Directorate of State Police. (2,6) Establishes the government's policy on addressing human trafficking through the State Committee Against Trafficking in Persons, chaired by the Interior Minister. (42)
Office of the Prosecutor General	Investigates and prosecutes child trafficking cases through the Serious Crimes Prosecution Office. (2)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

During the reporting period, a regional conference on the protection of children in conflict with the law was hosted in Tirana. Representatives from the Ministry of Justice also received training on the Juvenile Criminal Justice Code, as well as good practices in coordination between institutions. (43)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Albania took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the authority of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including lack of authority to inspect informal work locations such as private farms and unregistered businesses.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Concerns from the general public regarding suspected child labor abuses may be registered with the State Inspectorate for Labor and Social Services (SILSS) on paper, through e-mail, and by telephone. The SILSS can inspect all registered private entities, but cannot inspect private homes, private farms, or unregistered businesses. (7)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Albania took actions to address child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Yes (4)	No (44)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Yes (4)	N/A (44)

‡ Data are from January 1, 2021, to September 30, 2021.

If a child is subjected to trafficking for labor exploitation, the agency identifying the child refers the child to the police and state social services and then to an anti-trafficking shelter. (7,45) The case may also be referred to local Child Protection Units, which can then connect the child to social services. (7,40,45,46)

During the reporting period, a total of 64 new violations related to the worst forms of child labor were discovered. As of September 2021, 15 defendants had been convicted of offenses; in 9 cases, defendants received 2 years of imprisonment and 2 defendants received 5 years in prison. (7) Four additional cases resulted in probation of the individuals involved. (7)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including coordination among agencies.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
State Agency for the Rights and Protection of Children	Oversees implementation of the government's child rights protection policies, including monitoring the National Agenda for the Rights of the Child. (7,47) Manages cases of at-risk children and refers them to appropriate social services. Sanctions those who fail to protect children from violence and exploitation. (7,40) Coordinates local and central structures on health, security, and education of children. (7) During the reporting period, the State Agency for Rights and Protection of Children collaborated with the Ministry of Health and Social Protection and multiple other governmental and non-governmental entities in drafting the new National Agenda for the Rights of the Child 2021–2026. (7)
Office of the National Coordinator for the Fight Against Trafficking in Human Beings (ONAC)	Collaborates with regional counterparts to adopt standard protocols to guide anti-trafficking efforts. Oversees 12 regional anti-human trafficking committees that carry out local action plans in cooperation with civil society partners. (19) Chairs the National Referral Mechanism, which coordinates the identification, protection, referral, and rehabilitation of human trafficking victims between government and civil society organizations. Leads data collection and report writing for the National Database for Human Trafficking Victims/Potential Victims. (4,19) Runs the Closed Case Task Force with the Serious Crimes Prosecution Office and Albanian State Police. (22) During the reporting period, ONAC identified 100 minors as victims or potential victims of child trafficking. In addition, ONAC worked with the anti-trafficking shelter "Vatra" to develop 33 trainings tailored for government officials responsible for carrying out mandates pertaining to the protection of at-risk children. (7)
Ad-Hoc Cross-Sectorial Technical Groups (CTGs)	Address child protection cases in municipalities with more than 3,000 children. CTGs include representatives from multiple sectors including the police, social services, education, health, justice, and NGOs. (6) Decision of the Council of Ministers no. 353 defines the roles and responsibilities of CTGs in terms of promoting coordination among local-level actors. (6,48) During the reporting period, CTGs continued to work with child protection workers, community mediators, and social services departments of local governments to protect children from economic exploitation. (7)
Ministry of State for Youth and Children*	Established in September 2021 to further governmental efforts to promote healthy development and well-being of children in Albania. The Minister of State for Youth and Children bears the responsibility of drafting, developing, and monitoring policies pertinent to child protection and welfare. (7) Also promotes initiatives related to education, cultural centers, and the development of curricula tailored to the needs of Albanian youth. (7)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

Coordination among the SILSS and the Albanian State Police has traditionally been sporadic. (4,13,49)

During the reporting period, legal professionals and child protection workers participated in a course on supporting refugee and migrant children in the Western Balkans in cooperation with the Council of Europe, UNHCR, and the European Asylum Support Office. (50)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including lack of implementation.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on the Protection of Children from Economic Exploitation (2019–2021)	Approved by the National Council for Child Protection in October 2019 and overseen by the State Agency for the Protection and the Rights of Children. (2,4) Guaranteed the rights and protection of economically exploited children, including children in street situations. Also aimed to prevent the use of children for profit and enhance services and enforcement of legislation. (2,6) Defined the responsibilities of institutions involved in child protection, including children working in mining, street situations, and other situations that violate the law. (2) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the policy during the reporting period.
National Action Plan for Combating Trafficking in Persons (2021–2023)†	Calls for the identification and referral of child victims and those at risk of human trafficking to social protection services in accordance with standard operating procedures. (7) Increases the use of CPUs, police, and border control personnel to identify victims, including children involved in street work. Raises public awareness of all forms of human trafficking, including for forced labor. (7)
National Agenda for the Rights of the Child 2021–2026†	Aims to protect and promote children's rights by supporting physical and psychosocial development, and the social inclusion of children. (7,47) Objectives include improving children's access to services and enhancing legal and institutional mechanisms for child protection. Goals include promoting, respecting, and protecting children's rights through governance; eliminating all forms of violence against children; and creating child-friendly systems and services in education, justice, health, and social protection. (7,47)
National Strategy on Education 2021–2026†	Finalized in cooperation with UNICEF in April 2021. Aims to promote learning environments that are conducive to student well-being and preventing children from dropping out of school. (7)
National Cybersecurity Strategy (2020–2025)	Seeks to address the protection of children from online abuse and exploitation. Includes the establishment of a Technical Advisory Committee for Child Safety Online, within the National Council for Child Rights and Protection. (4,52,53) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the policy during the reporting period.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (6,54,55)

In 2021, Albania maintained its status as a Pathfinder Country under Alliance 8.7. This involves accelerating commitments toward achieving Sustainable Development Goal Target 8.7, which calls for the eradication of forced labor, modern slavery, human trafficking, and child labor by 2025. (56) During the reporting period, 145 children were removed from situations of economic exploitation and received social assistance provided by child protection authorities. (56)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of programs to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Program of Cooperation for Sustainable Development (2017–2021)	UN program that aimed to increase access to education for vulnerable children and improve protections for child victims of human trafficking. (57) During the reporting period, the Government of Albania and the UN office in Albania signed a new commitment to continue working on economic and social reforms to improve the situation for vulnerable populations throughout the country. (58)
Human Trafficking Shelters	The National Shelter Coalition† comprises one state-run and three NGO-run shelters for potential victims of human trafficking. (7) In 2021, 184 child trafficking victims around the country received assistance from these shelters. In addition, the National Shelter Coalition collaborated with the Office of the National Anti-Trafficking Coordinator to train 570 government officials (including 125 state police officers) on proper identification and protection of victims and those at risk of human trafficking. (7)
National Emergency Transition Center†	Government-run center that aims to provide vulnerable families with housing, health care, psychosocial and educational services, legal assistance, and employment placement aid. (6) During the reporting period, 33 children received emergency assistance in the form of accommodation, psychological consultations, food, clothing, and medical care. (7)
Child Allowance Program ( Ndihma Ekonomike )†	Government-funded cash transfer program that provides an allowance for families receiving economic aid through the Law on Social Assistance and Services. (6) During the reporting period, the government continued to provide regular cash payments to qualifying families, and the amount of assistance provided to families with multiple children under age 18 increased. (59)

Program	Description
Government-Run Hotlines†	Includes the Hotline for Potential Victims of Trafficking (operated by the State Police Directorate's Command Center) and the Albanian National Child Helpline and Helpline for Missing Children, established to assist children through phone counseling and case referrals to institutions providing services to children. (4,28) The hotlines continued to be operational during the reporting period. (7)
World Vision Albania Centers (Children's City Program)†	The municipalities of Durrës, Maliq, and Korçë collaborated with World Vision Albania to construct centers for children in high-risk situations, including violence, abuse, and various forms of exploitation. (60) During the reporting period, World Vision continued to support national- and municipal-level programs to provide community-based services to at-risk children, including a number of inclusive education initiatives. (7)
UNICEF Albania Projects†	During the reporting period, UNICEF collaborated with the Tirana OSCE office, a number of NGOs, and anti-trafficking shelters to complete the project "Transforming National Response to Human Trafficking In and From Albania." In addition, UNICEF continued to fund the ALO 116 National Child Helpline, which is a phone service designed to assist children via remote counseling and refer cases to relevant governmental and non-governmental institutions. (7,61)

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (54,62)

During the reporting period, child protection workers, municipal representatives, and representatives of a cross-sectoral technical group participated in an online training on child protection during emergencies. The training provided information related to child protection laws, guidelines developed to protect vulnerable children during the COVID-19 pandemic, and standard operating procedures. (7,63)

Research indicates that there is a lack of shelters for street children who are not victims of human trafficking, although some state- and NGO-run services were available for children who were forced to beg. (7) Research also found no evidence that programs were carried out to assist children scavenging chromium. (2,4,64) A lack of financial and human resources and issues related to the decentralization of social funds from the central government to municipalities were also cited as gaps in the efficient implementation of social programs. (6,51,54,64)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Albania (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that using, procuring, and offering children under age 18 for illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs, is criminally prohibited.	2015 – 2021
	Ensure that the use of children in prostitution is criminally prohibited.	2019 – 2021
Enforcement	Ensure that labor inspectors can inspect the informal sector in which child labor is known to occur, including private homes, private farms, or unregistered businesses.	2010 – 2021
Coordination	Ensure proper coordination between the State Inspectorate for Labor and Social Services and the Albanian State Police.	2019 – 2021
Government Policies	Ensure that activities are undertaken to implement policies addressing child labor and publish results from activities implemented during the reporting period.	2021
Social Programs	Collect and publish comprehensive data on the extent and nature of child labor in Albania. In particular, gather data on the prevalence and conditions of child labor in sectors of heightened concern, such as the agriculture and construction sectors.	2013 – 2021
	Provide adequate transportation resources for all children who face transportation-related barriers to school attendance, in particular Roma and Balkan Egyptian children and those who live in communities far from schools.	2011 – 2021
	Enhance efforts to eliminate barriers and make education accessible for all children, including children from Roma and Balkan Egyptian minority communities, children with disabilities, and children from Syria, Algeria, Libya, and elsewhere living in Albania as refugees or displaced migrants, by removing all school related fees and ensuring that children without documentation do not face obstacles to enroll in school.	2013 – 2021

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Social Programs	Provide translation services for all children, especially those from migrant or refugee families, who are facing language-related barriers to education.	2018 – 2021
	Increase the number of shelters for victims of the worst forms of child labor, in particular for children living and working on the streets.	2017 – 2021
	Institute programs to assist children who are victims of human trafficking and those who are used in scavenging chromium.	2014 – 2021
	Ensure that funding and human resources are increased for social programs for child labor and that decentralized social funds to municipalities are appropriately allocated to adequately carry out programs.	2018 – 2021

In 2021, Algeria made minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The National Authority for the Protection and Promotion of Children launched an interagency program with the National Social, Economic, and Environmental Council to increase coordination between governmental ministries to study children's needs in Algeria, analyze expenses dedicated to children, and develop a national action plan for children's development. However, children in Algeria are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and forced begging. Children also perform dangerous tasks in street vending. Algerian law does not provide increased penalties for, or categorize as a separate crime, the involvement of children in either the production or trafficking of drugs. Additionally, the government has not determined by national law or regulation the types of work that are hazardous for children to perform. Moreover, while the labor inspectorate is authorized to conduct inspections in all workplaces, inspectors do not investigate unmarked workplaces, such as houses or informal construction sites, without a complaint.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Algeria are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and forced begging. (1,2) Children also perform dangerous tasks in street vending. (3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Algeria.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	3.6 (Unavailable)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	94.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	3.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		103.7

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2020, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2022. (4)

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 6 (MICS 6), 2018–2019. (5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including harvesting olives (3,6,7)
Industry	Construction, activities unknown (6,8)
Services	Street work, including vending, collecting plastics, and begging (1,3,7,9)
	Domestic work (8)
	Working in small workshops and businesses, including mechanics' shops (3,7,8)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (10)
	Use in illicit activities, including drug trafficking (6)
	Forced begging (3,8,10)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Unaccompanied Sub-Saharan migrant children in Algeria are subjected to labor exploitation by criminal organizations, including commercial sexual exploitation. (3,7,11,12) Migrant children are also forced into begging. (3) Children's work is often part-time and informal in nature, with some migrant children working in small-scale family-run businesses such as restaurants or small stores. Children also work in informal street markets in street vending and begging. (7,8,13,14) In 2021, the government announced it would conduct a survey on child economic exploitation, which will be done in cooperation with UNICEF and is expected to be completed in 2022. (3,15) However, a comprehensive study on the activities and scope of the child labor situation in Algeria was not performed during the reporting period.

The Algerian public education system is free and open to all children ages 6 to 16, regardless of ethnicity and nationality. In 2021, parents in Algeria had to pay a fine for children who are truant. (3) Despite universal access to education, attendance problems have been present at schools in the southern regions of Algeria, with children as young as 13 or 14 dropping out of school. (14)

Non-Algerian children must provide documentation of grade level or sit for testing to determine their level. (7,8,14,16) There are no laws or regulations that prevent access to school, although there are reports of isolated cases of migrant children without valid documentation being denied enrollment by school administrators and reported to authorities. (3,7,14) In addition, migrants who do not speak Arabic, the language of instruction, face challenges in the Algerian education system. (14) Some migrant families may also not be familiar with Algerian law granting free education to all children. (14)

Barriers to education, including those placed on migrant children and children with disabilities, result in absence from school and increased vulnerability to child labor. (7,12,16,17)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Algeria has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Algeria's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the lack of prohibitions related to the use of children in illicit activities.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 15 of the Labor Code; Article 7 of Executive Decree No. 96-98 on the List and Content of Special Books and Registers Mandatory for Employers (18,19)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 15 of the Labor Code; Article 7 of Executive Decree No. 96-98 on the List and Content of Special Books and Registers Mandatory for Employers (18,19)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 303 bis 4 of the Penal Code (20)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	No		Articles 303 bis 4 and 319 bis of the Penal Code (20)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 2, 319, 333 bis 1, 343, and 344 of the Penal Code (20)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No		Article 195 bis of the Penal Code (20)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	17	Article 14 of Presidential Decree No. 08-134 on the National People's Army (21)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	Yes		Article 3 of Law No. 14-06 on National Service (22)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 12 of Law No. 08-04 on National Education (23)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 13 of Law No. 08-04 on National Education (23)

The prohibitions against child trafficking are insufficient because they require threats, the use of force, or coercion to be established for the crime of child trafficking. (20)

The Labor Code prohibits anyone under age 19 from working at night and anyone under age 18 from performing work that is harmful to their health, safety, or morals. (18) However, Algeria has not determined by national law or regulation the types of work that are hazardous for children, and research did not determine whether the government commission tasked with proposing a list of hazardous professions continued to work on this issue in 2021. Additionally, Algerian law does not provide increased penalties for, or categorize as a separate crime, the involvement of children in either the production or trafficking of drugs. (20)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security (MTESS)	Enforces labor laws, including laws related to child labor, through its General Labor Inspectorate; issues citations noting violations of labor laws; and refers violations to the Ministry of Justice. (1,3,16) Supervises the application of laws and regulations related to labor relations, working conditions, and worker safety. (3,6) Shares child labor reports with the Ministry of National Solidarity, Family, and the Condition of Women to ensure follow-up with social services. (3,6)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecutes child exploitation cases, including those related to non-compliance with labor laws, through its Office of Criminal Affairs and Amnesty Procedures, the lead enforcement agency for human trafficking issues. (3,14,24) During legal proceedings, appoints a special judge familiar with the needs of minors if a child does not have a parent. (3)

Organization/Agency	Role
The National Council for Human Rights	Housed under the authority of the President. Investigates human rights violations, including those pertaining to labor. (14)
Ministry of National Solidarity, Family, and the Condition of Women	Provides social services to children and families. Also conducts investigations, as directed by the Ministry of Justice, into issues related to children and families. (3,25)
Ministry of the Interior and Local Assemblies	Enforces criminal laws related to child trafficking through the Directorate General for National Security (DGSN) in urban areas, which comprises 8 active brigades of 77 specialized police officers focused on illegal immigration and human trafficking, and 50 Brigades for the Protection of Minors, including 300 police officers specializing in the protection of children. Maintains a hotline to report child abuse and missing children, and may conduct investigations on child labor violations, as directed by the Ministry of Justice. (3,6,13,17,25,26)
Ministry of National Defense	Enforces criminal laws pertaining to child labor, including child trafficking, in rural and border regions through the National Gendarmerie. As directed by the Ministry of Justice, may conduct investigations on child labor violations. (3,17) Works with DGSN and the NGO Algerian Network for the Defense of Children's Rights to administer hotlines for the reporting of child abuse; also receives training on child labor. (3,17) Maintains a website through which individuals can file complaints. (3,17)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Algeria took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including the lack of authority to inspect informal workplaces for child labor.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

When child labor law violations are found, the children are removed from worksites and placed in the school system. (14) In addition, the Government of Algeria increased the number of working units dedicated to child labor specifically. (3) However, the government did not provide information on labor inspectorate funding for inclusion in this report. Although the labor inspectorate is authorized to conduct inspections in all workplaces, inspectors do not investigate unmarked workplaces, such as houses or informal construction sites, without a complaint. (3)

The number of labor inspectors in Algeria dropped from 885 in 2020 to 709 in 2021. (3) The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Algeria's workforce, which includes more than 12.3 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Algeria would need to employ roughly 827 labor inspectors. (27,28)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Algeria took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including the lack of information pertaining to the number of investigations, prosecutions, and convictions.

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (24)	Yes (3)

The government did not provide information on the number of investigations, prosecutions initiated, convictions, or penalties imposed. (3) The government did provide initial training and refresher courses to criminal investigators. In addition, 180 judicial police officers received specialized trainings on children's matters from the UNODC. (3)

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies reported 9 violations involving 13 child victims. From 2020 to October 2021, 77 individuals were put in pre-trial detention on suspicion of exploiting children through begging networks and an additional 54 were put under judicial supervision. (3)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Authority for the Protection and Promotion of Children (ONPPE)	Protects and promotes children's rights and advocates for children in danger of economic exploitation. Acts as a liaison between the Ministry of Justice and members of the public alleging violations of children's rights, and oversees efforts of the National Commission for the Prevention of and Fight Against Child Labor. (3,6,7,26,29,30) Runs a national hotline and website to field questions and complaints about the mistreatment of children. (3) During the reporting period, the Authority continued to run the hotline and website, and held trainings for government officials and members of Algerian civil society. (3,14) In 2021, ONPPE launched an interagency program with the National Social, Economic, and Environmental Council to increase coordination between governmental ministries to study children's needs in Algeria, analyze expenses dedicated to children, and develop a national action plan for children's development. (3)
National Committee for the Prevention of and Fight Against Trafficking in Persons	Monitors implementation of the National Action Plan for the Prevention of and Fight Against Trafficking in Persons. Comprises representatives from the President's Office; the Prime Minister's Office; 12 ministries, including MTESS; and other government entities. (3,6,29,31,32) Active in 2021. (3)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including the lack of a policy specifically dedicated to addressing the worst forms of child labor.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for the Prevention of and Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (2019–2021)	Aimed to prevent and reduce human trafficking by raising awareness, strengthening legislation, prosecuting human trafficking crimes, improving the provision of protective services to survivors, and increasing collaboration with national and international NGOs. (14,33) Active in 2021. (3)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

The Algerian government does not have a national action plan to address the worst forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Labor Awareness Campaign†	Campaign carried out through ONPPE and other government agencies that undertakes various efforts to raise awareness about child labor throughout the year. The Ministry of National Solidarity, Family, and the Condition of Women also has a communication plan for each of the country's 48 wilayas (governates) on child-related messaging. (3)
Children Assistance Facilities‡	Facilities operated by the government to provide support for children, namely orphans and children in dangerous situations who are taken into custody by the state. (3) Active in 2021. (3)

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. (8,17,29)

Although Algeria has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, including the commercial sexual exploitation of children, forced begging, and street work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Algeria (Table 11).

In 2021, Angola made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government approved a new National Referral Mechanism for the Protection and Assistance to Victims of Human Trafficking and provided trainings on the new mechanism, including victim identification procedures, to law enforcement, border protection, customs and immigration officials, and local human rights committees. Furthermore, it established the Multisectoral Commission on the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor to coordinate efforts to address child labor. It also approved a new National Action Plan to Eradicate Child Labor (2021–2025), and through its Birth Registration and Justice for Children Program, the government approved over $63 million for the purchase of 15 million identification cards and 500 kits to be used to collect biometric and biographic data in order to accelerate its registration of the population. However, children in Angola are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in construction. Laws prohibiting forced labor are not sufficient as they do not criminalize practices similar to slavery or allow for the prosecution of debt bondage. Additionally, the number of labor inspectors does not meet the International Labor Organization's technical advice for the size of Angola's workforce, and social programs do not target all sectors in which children work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Angola are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-6) Children also perform dangerous tasks in construction. (4,6) The 2015–2016 Survey on Multiple Health Indicators found that 23 percent of children between the ages of 5 and 17 engage in child labor. The percentage of children engaged in child labor is higher in rural areas compared to urban areas; Cuanza Sul and Cuando Cubango provinces have the highest percentage of child laborers. (7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Angola. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	15.1 (1,246,354)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	69.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	13.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		Unavailable

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2011, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2022. (8)

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey (DHS), 2015–2016. (9)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including plowing, harvesting, watering crops, picking fruits and vegetables, and in the production of rice (6,10-13)
	Fishing, including artisanal fishing, and cleaning fish for deep freezing or sun drying (6,13-15)
	Cattle herding and animal grazing (4,6,10,12)
	Production of charcoal (16)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Industry	Artisanal diamond mining (4,6)
	Mining coal (6)
	Construction, including making and transporting bricks† (6,11,17,18)
	Animal slaughterhouses,† including cattle, goats, and pigs (19)
Services	Street work, including vending, car washing, parking assistance, shoe shining, begging, and transporting heavy loads† (4,6,11,13,17,20)
	Domestic work, including babysitting (4,10,13)
	Recycling cans and garbage scavenging (6,13,21)
	Working in shops (13)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-6,13,22)
	Forced labor in agriculture, brickmaking, construction, fisheries, artisanal diamond mining, and domestic work (4,12,22)
	Use in illicit activities, including drug trafficking (13)
	Use in illicit activities, including for the transport of illicit goods across the border of Angola and Namibia, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Research indicates that incidences of child labor have increased throughout the country, in particular in the provinces of Huíla, Cunene, and Luanda. Research further indicates that in the province of Namibe, there are over 50,000 children working in the agricultural sector. (12,13) Due to widespread droughts in Cunene Province, some villages force children to drop out of school to gather water, dig wells, and herd cattle. (4)

Undocumented Congolese migrant children enter Angola for work in diamond-mining districts, and some are subjected to forced labor or commercial sexual exploitation in mining camps. (4) Girls as young as age 12 are subjected to human trafficking from Kasai Occidental in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to Angola for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Angolan boys are taken to Namibia and forced to herd cattle or work as couriers to transport illicit goods. (4) Reports also indicate that some adults force children younger than age 12 to commit crimes because children cannot be criminally prosecuted. (4)

Education is free up to the ninth grade; however, families often face difficulty in paying informal school fees, such as for textbooks, and at times, bribes requested by some education officials for new admissions or passing grades. (6,23,24) Additional barriers to education for children include lack of classrooms and teachers, and research indicates that although over 500 schools have been built in the last few years, many children remain outside of the educational system. Research found that over 2 million school-age children in Angola do not attend school. (6,24) In addition, poor infrastructure, including the lack of sanitation facilities, disproportionately affects girls' attendance, especially at the secondary school level. (6,23,25) Refugee children also face difficulties in continuing their education beyond age 11 since their status is directly connected to their parents' refugee cards, which are not accepted by secondary schools. Currently, a mechanism to apply for identity documentation does not exist, but the government is making efforts to address the issue and ensure that refugee children are not hindered from continuing their education. (6) In 2021, reports indicate that the government undertook a project to document and integrate refugee groups from Liberia, Sierra Leone, and Rwanda by enabling those in these groups to receive resident alien cards and a pathway toward acquiring Angolan citizenship. In addition, the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights, in collaboration with UNHCR, is developing a national plan to address statelessness, which will provide a mechanism to ensure that children born to refugees in Angola receive birth certificates. (26) The plan is expected to be completed by mid-2022. (26)

Although children are permitted to attend school only up to the sixth grade without a birth certificate, the government has been conducting its "Massive Registration Campaign" throughout all 18 provinces, resulting in the issuance of 5.1 million birth registration cards and 4.7 million identification cards between December 2019 and December 2021. (6,27)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Angola has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	14	Articles 1, 2, and 254 of the Labor Law (28)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 3(21) and 256 of the Labor Law (28)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Article 256 of the Labor Law; Hazardous Work List (28,29)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	No		Articles 18 and 19 of the Money Laundering Law; Articles 175, 177, 178, 180, and 383 of the Penal Code (30,31)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 16, 19 and 23 of the Money Laundering Law; Articles 175, 177, 178, 180, 196, and 383 of the Penal Code (30,31)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 19, 22, and 23 of the Money Laundering Law; Articles 195–198 of the Penal Code (30,31)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 4 and 7 of the Drug Trafficking Law; Article 168(1b and 1d) of the Penal Code (31,32)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 11 of the Military Service Law (33)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	Yes		Article 2 of the Military Service Law (33)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Article 385(1c) of the Penal Code (31)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	14	Articles 12, 27, and 31 of the Basic Law of the Education System (34)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 11 of the Basic Law of the Education System (34)

The minimum age for work is not in compliance with international standards because the law's minimum age protections do not apply to children working without a work contract. (28) Laws prohibiting forced labor are not sufficient as they do not criminalize practices similar to slavery or allow for the prosecution of debt bondage. (30,31)

The list of hazardous activities and occupations identifies 57 activities prohibited for children; however, the legislation does not include diamond mining, a sector in which there is evidence of work conducted underground. (29)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Administration, Labor, and Social Security (MAPTSS)	Enforces laws against child labor and coordinates the Multisectoral Commission on the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor. In addition, fines employers or sends cases to the Ministry of Interior, through the Criminal Investigations Services, for further investigation, and to the Attorney General's Office for prosecution. (6) Employs labor inspectors in all 18 provinces to carry out inspections and joint operations with social services providers. (35)
National Children's Institute (INAC)	Receives complaints about cases of child exploitation, including child labor. Conducts inspections and responds to reports of child labor. (6)
Ministry of Interior's National Police	Enforce criminal laws and conduct operations and investigations related to the worst forms of child labor. Through its Criminal Investigation Services, collaborates with the Juvenile Court on child labor, child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and illicit recruitment investigations. (6)
Attorney General's Office	Investigates and prosecutes cases of the worst forms of child labor. (6)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Angola took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Public Administration, Labor, and Social Security (MAPTSS) that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including insufficient financial resource allocation.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

During the reporting period, labor inspectors received initial and refresher training, including on concepts related to child labor and hazardous child labor conditions. Although MAPTSS indicates that trainings were not completed due to COVID-19 restrictions, new inspectors received over 112 hours of training, including 24 hours focused on labor inspections. (6) Furthermore, four Angolan labor inspectors attended a seminar organized by the ILO and the Community of Portuguese Language Countries on the Role of Labor Inspection in the Fight against Child Labor. (6)

Although inspections were conducted throughout the country, no labor inspections were conducted in the informal sector, which consists of 75 percent of Angola's economic activity, and in which child labor is known to primarily occur. (6) Although Angola employs 277 labor inspectors, the number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Angola's workforce, which includes approximately 13.97 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Angola would need to employ about 349 labor inspectors. (37-39) Moreover, MAPTSS indicated that the budget allocated for labor inspection activities was insufficient to conduct inspections in sectors in which child labor is known to occur. (6)

Inspectors from MAPTSS work with the National Children's Institute (INAC) and the Ministry of Social Action, Family, and the Advancement of Women (MASFAMU) to ensure that child labor victims receive the appropriate social services. (40) INAC refers children found during inspections to social services and safeguards the legal rights of children found during inspections. INAC meets with MASFAMU and coordinates complaints with the Criminal Investigation Services (SIC), which then refers cases to the Children's Tribunal (Tribunal de Menores). (6)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Angola took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including insufficient training for criminal investigators.

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Yes (10)	Yes (6)

In September 2021, a Chinese national was arrested for allegedly exploiting 20 children between the ages of 13 and 16 for commercial sex in the fishing village of Cahota, in the province of Benguela. The case is currently under investigation by the SIC, while MASFAMU and INAC are responsible for connecting these children with the appropriate social services. (6) During the reporting period, a conviction was also secured against an Angolan citizen in Uíge Province for a 2019 human trafficking case involving two minors, ages 6 and 13, from the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). The individual was sentenced to 4 years in prison. (41) The government also cooperated with DRC officials to trace the minors' families and repatriated them back to their residences. (41) In addition, three investigations involving child trafficking victims were conducted in 2021. (41)

During the reporting period, the government approved new Standard Procedures for Assistance to Child Victims of Violence, including children subjected to the worst forms of child labor. A new National Referral Mechanism for the Protection and Assistance to Victims of Human Trafficking was approved, and trainings on victim identification procedures were provided to law enforcement, border protection, and customs and immigration officials, and to members of local human rights committees. (41) In addition, standard operating procedures, used by Angola's provinces to inform INAC and MASFAMU officials whenever victims of the worst forms of child labor are identified, were also updated. (41,42)

Child trafficking victims can be referred to MASFAMU-run shelters before a determination is made regarding their reintegration with their families or guardians. (6,10) INAC and MASFAMU use a network of 114 counseling and housing shelters to support victims and provide them with social services. (42) Reports indicate, however, that victims in rural areas have less access to social services than those in urban areas. (41)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Although training for criminal investigators is an ongoing process for new and established employees, reports indicate that the training is insufficient, particularly for investigators located outside the capital and in remote areas across the country. (40)

The government did not publicly release data on the number of violations found or prosecutions initiated during the reporting period.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including challenges with aggregating and synthesizing data on human trafficking cases.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Multisectoral Commission on the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor*	Addresses all issues related to the worst forms of child labor and leads implementation of the National Action Plan to Eradicate Child Labor. Led by the Minister of Public Administration, Labor and Social Security, and includes representatives from INAC, the Ministry of Social Action, Family, and the Advancement of Women (MASFAMU), and six other government agencies. (6) In 2021, began implementing the newly approved National Action Plan to Eradicate Child Labor, including establishing procedures to measure and report on child labor and coordinate with law enforcement and social services. (6)
Interministerial Commission to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Coordinates enforcement efforts on human trafficking, including child trafficking for labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Led by the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights. (40) In 2021, participated in a workshop in collaboration with IOM, aimed at approving the National Referral Mechanism for the Protection and Assistance to Victims of Human Trafficking. (43) In addition, convened nine times over the reporting period, and held an unspecified number of meetings with other government agencies, NGOs, and international partners. (41)
National Council for Social Action	Promotes and defends children's rights through social consultation and monitoring of public policies. Led by MASFAMU. (44) In July 2021, participated in the virtual conference "Eliminating Child Labor by 2025," alongside MASFAMU and INAC. The conference took place during the launch of the International Year of Africa event, and focused on proactive actions outlining concrete measures to end child labor through the implementation of the Decennial action plan which was approved by the heads of African states in February 2020. (18)
MASFAMU	Ensures coordination among various government agencies related to social welfare and victim protection. Oversees a national network of support centers established for the protection of children, offering health care, psychological care, legal and social assistance, meals, basic education, and family reunification for victims of crime, including victims of human trafficking. (40) In 2021, coordinated with INAC to connect children involved in a prostitution ring to the appropriate social services, and conducted sex tourism awareness and prevention campaigns with the institute, through radio and television public service announcements. (6,41) In addition, conducted two trainings on the systems of referral and protection for children, including human trafficking training components, attended by government officials. (41)
INAC	Coordinates child protective services. Works with MASFAMU to provide shelter and helps with family reintegration for children found in child labor situations. (40) In 2021, conducted a national awareness campaign addressing sexual violence against children. (45)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

During the reporting period, the Government of Angola signed agreements with South Africa and the DRC establishing new protocols of cooperation on addressing transnational crime, including human trafficking. These protocols are currently pending ratification with the National Assembly. (41) In addition, in 2021, the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights established 90 new Local Human Rights Committees, bringing its total to 163 committees at the provincial, municipal, and community levels. These committees will become the primary mechanisms for collecting human trafficking information and carrying out activities, such as trainings and awareness campaigns, to implement the Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons. (41)

Despite the existence of the Interministerial Commission to Combat Trafficking in Persons, the government faces challenges with aggregating and synthesizing data on human trafficking cases. (46)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies that are consistent with relevant international standards on child labor (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Eradicate Child Labor (2021–2025) †	Prioritizes effective, immediate, and integrated measures toward the promotion of children's rights, including through the prevention and eradication of child labor and its worst forms, by 2025. Implemented by the Multisectoral Commission on the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor; lays out seven principal focus areas: child development; social assistance; education; advocacy, accountability, and enforcement; raising children's voices; communication; and monitoring and evaluation. (47) Each area provides specific objectives, including increasing access to education and vocational training, raising awareness of the problem at all levels of the community, strengthening relevant legal framework, and increasing the capacity of children's participation. (47)
National Action Plan on Preventing and Combating Trafficking in Persons (2020–2025)	Outlines Angola's strategy to address human trafficking, including domestic human trafficking, in a 5-year plan with the option of extension. Commits to specific activities designed to improve the prevention, protection and assistance, and prosecution components involved in addressing human trafficking. (48) In 2021, the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights launched a campaign focused on identifying human trafficking and its various forms. (49) During the reporting period, several workshops on human trafficking were also conducted by the ministry and attended by government officials, law enforcement, and NGO representatives. (26)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (50)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Social Protection Programs †	National network of child support centers implemented by the government in coordination with NGOs, offering meals, shelter, basic education, and family reunification services to victims of crime, including child trafficking victims. MASFAMU and the Organization of Angolan Women operate 52 children's shelters that assist victims of child trafficking. (40) Active in 2021. (6)
Birth Registration and Justice for Children †	Government-run program making birth registration free for all Angolan citizens. (51) In August 2021, the government approved $63.4 million for the purchase of 15 million identification cards and 500 kits to collect biometric and biographic data. (6)
Mobile Schools and Free Meals for Children †	Ministry of Education program that provides education in mobile schools to migrant children who work with their parents in cattle herding. Specifically targets children at the highest risk of involvement in child labor in southern Angola. (40) Supports some mobile schools with kitchens, facilitating the free school meals program. (40) In 2021, the program returned in full force, with a focus on locally sourced products, after being limited to a number of schools in 2020 due to the pandemic. (6)
Strengthening Capacity of the Government of Angola	USDOS-funded, $580,000, 2-year project implemented by IOM to strengthen Angola's response to human trafficking, including the formalization of victim identification, referrals using standardized screening, risk assessment, and assistance tools to be used across all provinces. Funds the upgrade of four shelters for victims and an awareness-raising campaign on the risks of irregular migration. (52) In 2021, IOM conducted assessments of human trafficking victims' shelters in Luanda and received approval to make material improvements on one of the shelters. IOM also participated in human trafficking awareness media spots for television and radio, which are set to air in early 2022. (26)

Although Angola has implemented programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. Furthermore, research did not identify programs that seek to reach children subjected to certain worst forms of child labor, such as commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Angola (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the minimum age for work applies to all children, including children without a work contract.	2021
	Ensure that laws prohibiting forced labor criminalize practices similar to slavery and allow for the prosecution of debt bondage.	2021
	Ensure that the law prohibits hazardous occupations or activities for children in all relevant sectors in Angola, including diamond mining.	2011 – 2021
Enforcement	Publish information regarding labor inspectorate funding.	2011 – 2021
	Increase the number of labor inspectors to meet the ILO's technical advice.	2009 – 2021

	Ensure that rural areas have adequate access to social services.	2021
	Increase training for criminal investigators, including training of investigators outside the capital and in remote areas across Angola.	2019 – 2021

	Increase the capacity to aggregate and synthesize data on human trafficking cases.	2018 – 2021
Social Programs	Develop and expand existing social programs to ensure that all children have access to education and are not restricted by informal fees, lack of birth certificates, lack of teachers, or poor school infrastructure.	2013 – 2021
	Institute programs that target children subjected to commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor and expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem.	2010 – 2021
	Ensure that refugee children are not hindered from continuing their education beyond age 11 by providing a working mechanism whereby identification documents can be obtained.	2020 – 2021

Although research found no evidence that child labor exists in Anguilla, in 2021, the government made no advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The law does not prohibit the involvement of children in illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs. In addition, the minimum ages for work and hazardous work do not meet international standards, and Anguilla lacks a list of prohibited hazardous occupations and activities for children.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor exists in Anguilla. Table 1 provides one key indicator on children's education in Anguilla. (1)

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Primary Completion Rate (%)		95.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2019, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2022. (1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

British Overseas Territories (BOTs) recognize the jurisdiction and sovereignty of the United Kingdom (UK), but are not constitutionally part of the UK. They are self-governing, except in the areas of foreign affairs and defense. (2) Domestic UK law does not generally apply unless explicitly extended to Anguilla. Under Article 35(4) of the ILO Constitution, when the UK ratifies a Convention, the Territory must consider if it will accept the Convention. (2) If the Convention is accepted, it is considered applicable to that territory. The following Convention has been extended to and accepted by Anguilla (Table 2).

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government of Anguilla has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 3). However, gaps exist in Anguilla's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the minimum age for work.

Table 3. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	12	Articles 1, 3, and 4 the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act; Articles 1 and 2 of the Employment of Children (Restriction) Act (3,4)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	No	14	Articles 1, 3, and 4 of the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act; Articles 1 and 2 of the Employment of Children (Restriction) Act (3,4)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	No		Article 6 of the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act (3)

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 242 and 243 of the Criminal Code; Chapter I, Section 4 of the Constitution Order (5,6)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 242, 243, 247, and 248 of the Criminal Code (5)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 244 of the Criminal Code (5)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	N/A†
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	N/A*†
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	17	Article 117 of the Education Act (7)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 106 of the Education Act (7)

* Country has no conscription (8)

† Country has no standing military (8)

The minimum age of 12 for work does not meet international standards. The minimum age of 14 for hazardous work also does not meet international standards as it applies only to industrial undertakings, transportation of passengers or goods by roads or rail, and work on ships. (3,4) Anguilla lacks a list of prohibited hazardous occupations and activities for children. However, there is a prohibition of night work for children under age 16 in the manufacturing of raw sugar, and a prohibition of night work in other industrial undertakings for children under age 18. (3) In addition, Anguilla's laws do not criminally prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs. (5,9,10) As the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. (4,7)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms. However, Anguilla has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor. (Table 4).

Table 4. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Labor of the Ministry of Finance, Economic Development, Investments, and Tourism	Through the Employment of Children (Restriction) Act, the Labor Commissioner has the authority to enforce all labor laws pertaining to child labor and may freely enter and inspect any premises where violations of child labor laws may be occurring. The Labor Commissioner also is the head of the Department of Labor. (4) Research was unable to determine whether the Labor Commissioner undertook any such inspections during the reporting period.
Department of Social Development of the Ministry of Social Development	Safeguards the well-being of children and investigates reports of child abuse, neglect, or allegations that a child is otherwise at risk of harm. Has jurisdiction over both child protection and juvenile justice services. (11,12)
Royal Anguilla Police Force Safeguarding Investigation Unit	Investigates child protection cases and conducts forensic interviews and examinations of children. (11,12)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor. However, the Government of Anguilla has established a mechanism to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 5).

Table 5. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Ministry of Social Development	Has primary responsibility for child protection efforts and oversees the Interagency Child Protection Protocol. Remained active during the reporting period. (11,13)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor. However, the Government of Anguilla has policies that include the Child Safeguarding National Action Plan and an Interagency Child Protection Protocol. (11,14) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement Anguilla's key policies related to child labor during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the continued prevention of child labor in Anguilla (Table 6).

Table 6. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify international conventions on child labor.	2020 – 2021
	Ensure that the law establishes the minimum age for work at no less than age 15, and preferably at the age up to which education is compulsory.	2016 – 2021
	Establish age 18 as the minimum age for all hazardous work.	2011 – 2021
	Determine the types of hazardous work prohibited for children, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations.	2017 – 2021
	Ensure that the law prohibits the use of children in illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs.	2014 – 2021
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under age 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016 – 2021
Government Policies	Ensure that activities are undertaken to implement the Child Safeguarding National Action Plan and the Interagency Child Protection Protocol and make information about implementation measures publicly available.	2021

In 2021, Argentina made significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government conducted and published a study examining the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on children and child labor prevalence. It also reported completing more than 50 targeted actions outlined in the National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking, which included measures to address child pornography. Meanwhile, the national coordination mechanism to eradicate child labor launched an action plan to improve government cooperation with the private sector in addressing child labor. Similarly, the Ministry of Labor enacted a new policy to improve anti-child labor coordination efforts at the sub-national level. However, children in Argentina are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in illicit activities, such as the transport, sale, and distribution of drugs. Children also engage in dangerous tasks in agriculture. Moreover, the government does not publish complete information about its labor law enforcement efforts and the labor inspectorate remains understaffed to adequately address child labor issues in the country.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Argentina are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in illicit activities, such as the transport, sale, and distribution of drugs. (1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Argentina. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	5.3 (371,771)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	98.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	6.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		98.7

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, including use in the production of pornography, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4,9,30)
	Forced labor in agriculture and in the production of garments, charcoal, and bricks (4,14,30,31)
	Use in illicit activities, including transporting, selling and distributing drugs (2,9,32,33)
	Forced labor in domestic work and street vending (1,4,9,30)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Although the extent of the problem is unknown, reports indicate that girls from Argentina’s northern provinces are victims of human trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation. (1,3) Reports also indicate that Paraguayan children are victims of human trafficking for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation in Argentina. (1,34) Limited reporting also indicates that sex traffickers exploit minors participating in domestic youth sports clubs. (6,31) Children from primarily the northern provinces and from Bolivia, Paraguay, Peru, and other countries are used in forced labor in numerous sectors, including garment production, agriculture, street vending, charcoal and brick production, domestic work, and in small businesses. (3,6,28,31,35)

Misiones—producer of 90 percent of Argentina’s and 60 percent of the world’s yerba mate—is one of the provinces most affected by child labor. Children as young as age 5 help their parents harvest yerba mate, sometimes carrying heavy loads. (23) In Salta and Jujuy provinces, children harvest tobacco. (21,36)

In 2021, the Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security (MTEySS) published results of a study, conducted in collaboration with the ILO and UNICEF, measuring the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on children in the country. The study found that 46 percent of children between the ages of 13 and 17 and engaged in work began doing so as a result of the pandemic. (37-39) Of those that began working, 7 out of 10 resided in households that had experienced job loss or a reduction in working hours. (38,39) Overall, the study found that the rate of working children ages 13 to 17 had increased as a result of the pandemic, from 17 percent in November 2020 to 23 percent in October 2021. (5,40,41)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Argentina has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Argentina’s legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including a gap between the minimum age for work and the compulsory education age.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Articles 2, 7, and 17 of the Prohibition of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Work Law; Article 9 of the Special Code on Contracting Domestic Workers; Article 25 of the Child and Adolescent Rights Protection Law; Articles 54 and 55 of the Law on Agrarian Work; Article 189 of the Employment Contract Law (42-46)

Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 15 and 16 of the Child and Adolescent Rights Protection Law (42)

* Country has no conscription (57)

The minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, which may encourage children to leave school before the completion of compulsory education.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Argentina

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security (MTEySS)	Carries out labor law enforcement efforts in coordination with labor officials and authorities at the provincial level in each Argentine province and the Autonomous City of Buenos Aires. (5,58) Enforces child labor laws in part through its Inspection Directorate of Child Labor; the Protection of Adolescent Work, and Indicators of Labor Exploitation (DITIAEIEL) and collaborates with the National Registry of Rural Workers and Employers (RENATRE) in enforcing child labor laws in the agricultural sector. (14) In addition, maintains a national hotline through which labor violations can be reported and leads the Network of Businesses Against Child Labor ( Red de Empresas contra el Trabajo Infantil ), a network of companies promoting best practices in the private sector to address child labor. Labor inspectors are tasked with enforcing laws related to child labor as part of MTEySS' broader enforcement strategy, the National Plan for the Regularization of Labor ( Plan Nacional de Regularización del Trabajo [PNRT]). (14) A specific line of action in the PNRT is to detect and eradicate child labor and irregular adolescent work, so the standard operating procedure for inspections includes efforts to detect child labor violations. (14)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights	Manages Line 145, the anonymous national hotline that allows the public to report suspected human trafficking cases. Through its Office of Rescue and Attention to Victims of Trafficking ( Oficina de Programa de Rescate ), provides emergency legal and other assistance to victims of labor and sex trafficking, including child victims. (14,59,60) Maintains regional offices that coordinate the provision of legal and social services to human trafficking victims in the provinces of Chaco, Chubut, La Pampa, La Rioja, Mendoza, Rio Negro, and Santa Fe. (14,61)
Public Prosecutor's Office	Detects, investigates, and prosecutes cases of human trafficking and labor exploitation through its Special Prosecutor's Office for Human Trafficking and Exploitation (PROTEX). (62)
Federal and National Immigration Police	Conduct human trafficking investigations through the Trafficking in Persons Division. (14,63) Oversee the rights of migrants and assist in investigating cases of transnational human trafficking. (14)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Argentina took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the MTEySS that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including insufficient human resource allocation.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In 2021, MTEySS reported identifying 11 minors in conditions of labor exploitation as a result of routine labor inspections. Details about these and other child labor cases were not available. (30,41)

In addition to labor inspectors employed in MTEySS, provincial governments also employ their own local labor inspectors, though the total number for these inspectors is unknown. (5) Nonetheless, the number of national inspectors is still likely insufficient for the size of Argentina's workforce, which includes over 12.3 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Argentina would employ about 1,391 labor inspectors. (65) The government does not report on the number of provincial inspectors, so the totals reflect only the number of federal inspectors; NGOs continue to report that the number is insufficient. (3,66) Moreover, the government does not publish labor enforcement data on the labor inspectorate budget or the total number of child labor penalties imposed or collected. (14,66)

MTEySS requires inspectors to refer victims of child labor to the Provincial Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor for social services assistance and its inspection protocol mandates that federal labor inspectors notify the relevant provincial child protection authorities after detecting a child labor violation. (3,66) Labor inspectors are also required to file a criminal complaint with the provincial courts of the relevant jurisdiction for any child labor violation detected. (3,9,66) MTEySS reported that its labor inspectors cooperated with law enforcement authorities in criminal matters resulting from the criminal complaints that inspectors filed after finding child labor violations. (3)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Argentina took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including allocating insufficient human resources.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Yes (14)	Yes (5)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Yes (14)	Yes (5)

Imposed Penalties for Violations Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Yes (14)	Yes (5)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (14)	Yes (5)

The government reported that in 2021, it had implemented 67 of the "100 Actions Against Trafficking" outlined in Argentina's action plan to address human trafficking, including measures aimed at prevention, assisting victims, prosecuting criminals, and capacity building among agencies. (5,30) Four investigations in 2021 involved cases of child pornography, one of the target areas of the action plan. (30)

During the reporting period, a public officer from the city of Florencio Varela was sentenced to 13 years in prison in part for the commercial sexual exploitation of minors. (30) The government provided and participated in numerous trainings during the reporting period. The Special Prosecutor's Office for Human Trafficking and Exploitation (PROTEX) trained officials on the non-punishment of human trafficking victims and on the trafficking and smuggling of migrants while the Ministry of Tourism and Sports offered trainings on protecting children's and adolescents' rights in the tourism industry. (30)

Argentine law enforcement authorities report a lack of funding and resources. (31) Research has identified the need for the government to build the capacity of its judiciary and police to investigate cases of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. (68)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including efficacy in accomplishing mandates.

Argentina

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor (CONAETI)	Coordinates national efforts to monitor and eliminate child labor and implement the Third National Action Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Regulation of Adolescent Work. Led by the Secretariat of Promotion, Protection, and Technological Change and comprises 16 government agencies, representatives from UNICEF, International Labor Organization, industry associations, and labor unions. (5) During the reporting period, developed an interministerial plan in recognition of the “International Year for the Elimination of Child Labor” that focused on interministerial coordination, territorial action, tripartite social dialogue, and institutionalized approaches to the issue of child labor. Also developed the Labor-Free Childhoods Program. (5)
Coordination of Child Labor Eradication and Adolescent Work Protection Policies	A dependent unit at the Under-secretariat for Politics of Inclusion in Labor at MTEySS, designs public policies on child labor; plans and implements the 2021 Interministerial Plan; carries out assistance programs and trainings; develops public campaigns and communication efforts; coordinates different areas of MTEySS dedicated to child labor-related issues; represents the Ministry at international events and affairs; cooperates on enforcing the legal framework regarding child labor; and presides over CONAETI. (5) During the reporting period, the coordinating body worked on the implementation of the 2021 Interministerial Plan and launched the Federal Strengthening Program for the Eradication of Child Labor. (5) The coordinating body also launched its 2021 Action Plan for the Businesses Against Child Labor Network, an effort to improve government cooperation with the private sector in preventing and eradicating child labor. (69)
Inspection Directorate of Child Labor, Protection of Adolescent Work and Indications of Labor Exploitation (DITIAEIEL)	Formerly the Coordinating Body for the Prevention of Child Labor and Regulation of Adolescent Work (COODITIA) and elevated to a directorate level within MTEySS in 2020, implements inspections to detect child labor and irregular adolescent labor; verifies the conditions of adolescent labor; monitors labor exploitation of children and adolescents; trains inspectors from MTEySS and from the subnational units; promotes the creation of special inspection units; and provides technical assistance to labor inspectors. (5) As part of 2021 efforts to commemorate World Day Against Child Labor, DITIAEIEL carried out punitive inspections targeting child labor violators and worked to implement improvements to the inspection process. (70)
Provincial Committees for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor (COPRETI)s	Created under a cooperative agreement between MTEySS and the Federal Work Council, coordinate activities implemented at a provincial level and coordinate between government, business, union, and civil society stakeholders within their respective provinces to implement actions to combat child labor at a local level. There are 24 COPRETI, one for each province, including the City of Buenos Aires. (5,71) During the reporting period, the government launched the Federal Support Program for the Eradication of Child Labor, a grant project aimed at improving COPRETI collaboration with civil society, labor unions, and businesses in order to identify appropriate intervention measures in regions or supply chains at risk of employing child labor. (72) After a pilot program the prior year, in 2021 COPRETI continued its cooperation with the Argentinean Blueberry Committee to implement the first social compliance system in Argentina's agricultural sector, which includes public awareness campaigns, monitoring and prevention mechanisms, and child care centers at worksites. (73)
Executive Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking and Exploitation of People and the Protection and Assistance of Victims	National coordinating body on government anti-trafficking in persons policies comprising the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights; the Ministry of Security; the Ministry of Social Development; the Ministry of Women, Gender, and Diversity; and MTEySS. (5) In 2021, the coordinating body began implementing the newly drafted and published national biennial action plan against trafficking in persons, named “100 Actions Against Human Trafficking.” (5,30)

Research indicates that coordination to provide services to child victims of commercial sexual exploitation is ineffective, obstructing full implementation of some programs, and causing some programs' objectives and target groups to overlap. (75) The National Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor has acknowledged that one of the central areas of concern for the committee was the need to strengthen cooperation between national- and provincial-level governments. (76)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including a lack of publicly available information on activities taken under each policy during the reporting period.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Third National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Regulation of Adolescent Work (2018–2022)	Aims to prevent and eliminate child labor, including its worst forms, and to regulate adolescent work. Promotes the dissemination of information on child labor; creates local roundtables on child labor; promotes families' livelihoods, strengthens the labor inspectorate, fosters civil society engagement on child labor issues, provides for a more inclusive educational system, raises awareness of the safety and health implications of child labor; and promotes institutional and legislative strengthening for child labor issues. (9,77,78) All coordinating and policy activities carried out during the reporting period were conducted under the purview of the national action plan. (5)
Federal Strengthening Program for the Eradication of Child Labor†	Established through Labor Ministry Resolution 268/2021 in 2021, targets leaders at the sub-national level who can improve the effectiveness of preventative strategies and the detection of child labor and unprotected irregular adolescent work. (5,79) Aims to develop coordinated actions among the Provincial Committees on the Eradication of Child Labor (COPRETIs), civil society organizations, labor unions, and companies both in common geographic areas and productive sectors that show high risks of child labor. (5)
2021 Interministerial Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor	Established in 2021 under the framework of the United Nations' "International Year for the Eradication of Child Labor (2021)," encourages UN Member States to create and implement policies that prevent, raise awareness of, and eradicate child labor. (41)
Interagency Agreement for Prevention of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker	Collaborative agreement between MTEySS and the Ministry of Education to integrate child labor prevention and protection of adolescent workers in curricula and teacher training courses. (9,80) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this policy during the reporting period.
Biennial National Plan Against Human Trafficking and Exploitation, and for Protection and Assistance of Victims (TIP Action Plan 2020–2022)	Approved by the Federal Council to Fight Human Trafficking and to Protect and Assist Victims, focuses on prevention, prosecution, and protection of human trafficking victims and incorporates an institutional goal of fortifying interagency coordination, including by establishing a unified database on human trafficking victims. The Federal Council coordinates the plan's implementation and includes NGO representation in its meetings. (5) The government continued implementing the plan during the reporting period. (5,30)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (81,82,83)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Universal Child Allowance Program ( Asignación Universal )†	Government program funded in part by the World Bank that provides a cash transfer to unemployed parents and workers in the informal economy, contingent upon parents' fulfillment of health and education requirements for their children. (9,84) During the reporting period, the government increased the payment amount to beneficiaries by 8.07 percent and in early 2022 announced plans for further increases. (85,86)
National Registry of Rural Workers and Employers (RENATRE) Awareness-Raising Campaigns†	RENATRE campaigns that raise awareness of child labor in agriculture and inform families and children of the right to education. (87) During the reporting period, RENATRE hosted a virtual seminar that included government, private sector, and labor union representatives to discuss and analyze the role of social protection mechanisms in the effort to combat child labor. (88) RENATRE also took part in the first Virtual South-South Exchange on the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor in 2021 hosted by Peru. (89)
Good Harvest Program*	Reconstituted in 2021 under a MTEySS resolution, aims to provide childcare facilities and services for migrant and rural families involved in seasonal harvests to prevent child labor. (90,91) In addition to formalizing the program under MTEySS and granting it an operating budget, the 2021 resolution also extended the qualifying age for children to receive services from ages 16 to 18. (91)
National Campaign Against Child Labor in Brickmaking†	Launched in 2017 by MTEySS and the Argentine Brick Workers Union (UOLRA), aims to develop policies that improve labor inspections in this sector and to better support brick workers, so their children do not have to work. (92,93) During the reporting period, UOLRA continued its public awareness campaign titled "The Only Privileged Ones are Children." (94)

(95–101) Additional information is available on the USDOL website.

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Argentina.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (102,103)

Research has identified the need for the government to increase funding for shelters and assistance to girl victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. (66) Research found no evidence of social programs that specifically target children engaged in street begging and performing, windshield washing, and guarding parked cars, despite the prevalence of these activities that are designated as hazardous for children.

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In 2021, Armenia made minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government nearly doubled the staffing of their labor inspectorate from 27 inspectors to 50, with additional funding and intentions to hire more than 90 inspectors in the near future. The Health and Labor Inspection Body also held regular trainings for inspectors around the country and entered into an agreement with the Agricultural University to train students on labor issues, including child labor and human trafficking. However, despite new initiatives to address child labor, Armenia is receiving an assessment of minimal advancement because it continued to implement a regression in law that delays advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. Labor inspectors still lack the authority to conduct unannounced inspections, despite receiving additional authority in 2021. The lack of unannounced inspections may leave potential violations of child labor laws and other labor abuses undetected in workplaces. Children in Armenia are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also engage in child labor in agriculture. The government does not routinely collect or maintain official data on child labor. In addition, the minimum age for work does not meet international standards because labor legislation does not apply to children working in the informal sector. Lastly, the laws criminalizing commercial sexual exploitation of children are insufficient because they do not explicitly criminalize those engaging in commercial sex involving children.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Armenia are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-3) Children also engage in child labor in agriculture. (1,3-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Armenia.

	Raising livestock, including cattle breeding, cattle herding, and sheepherding (1,4)
	Forestry, fishing (8)
Industry	Construction, activities unknown(4,8,9)
Services	Vehicle maintenance (4,8)
	Selling food (2,4)
	Street work, including vending, gathering scrap metal, selling flowers, and begging (1,8)
	Working in shops (1,4)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1,3,10,11)
	Forced begging and forced labor in stores (1,2,10)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

The Government of Armenia does not routinely collect or maintain official data on child labor. (12) Reports indicate that significant numbers of children, including some below the age of 14, leave school to work in the informal sectors in agriculture and construction, and increasing numbers of children are engaged in begging. (5,13) In February 2021, the government adopted procedures for identifying children who have dropped out of compulsory education, and created an institutional response mechanism to prevent child trafficking and child labor, as children outside of the education system are a high-risk population for exploitation. (14) However, there is no enforcement of the mandatory school attendance requirement, nor are there programs to identify, assess, and address the reasons for truancy or dropping out. (15) In particular, authorities note that less-educated, socially vulnerable girls are at higher risk of being trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation. (11)

Although Article 38 of the Constitution of Armenia and Article 6 of the Law of the Republic of Armenia on Education guarantee free universal education, children from ethnic minority and low-income families continue to have reduced access to education. (16-18) Children of families who travel for seasonal labor and work on farms in remote rural areas are also less likely to be enrolled in school and are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including forced child labor in agriculture. (19) Reports also indicate that in rural areas, families may keep girls out of school because of cultural expectations or concerns about severe gender imbalance in classrooms. (5,20)

The Law on Education requires all schools to be inclusive for children with disabilities by 2025, and the 2017–2021 National Strategy for Child Rights Protection includes priority actions to ensure equitable and inclusive education. (18,21,22) The government has made progress in improving access to education in bordering and remote communities and implemented a program to pay tuition fees for students from national minorities. The detection of school dropouts has also been a priority for the government, which implemented a new electronic system to identify children who are not enrolled in mandatory school programs. (1)

However, children with disabilities still face difficulty accessing mainstream education where school buildings remain inaccessible. In addition, lack of special education teachers and other specialists makes it particularly difficult for students with mental disabilities to access mainstream education. (22,23) Challenges remain with institutionalized children, such as those living in government boarding schools, orphanages, and special education institutions. (24,25) These children are more likely to experience physical and psychological violence and are at a higher risk of becoming victims of human trafficking. (9,10,24) Children living in these institutions are reportedly also vulnerable to exploitation in child labor, including labor within the institutions. (26,27)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Armenia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Armenia's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including a lack of definitions for forced labor and light work.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	18	Article 18 of the Law on Education (18)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 38 of the Constitution; Article 6 of the Law on Education (16,18)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (33)

In May 2021, the government adopted a new Criminal Code which entered into force in July 2022. However, research was not able to determine what this legislation contains. (1,35) In July 2021, amendments to the mandate of the Health and Labor Inspection Body (HLIB) entered into force, which grant the HLIB authority to investigate cases of administrative offences in the field of labor law and to impose sanctions. (1,36)

The Labor Code allows children ages 14 and 15 to work restricted hours with the permission of a parent or guardian but does not identify specific activities that constitute light work. (28) In addition, the Constitution,

Armenia

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Criminal Code, and Labor Code prohibit forced labor, but enforcement of this prohibition may be hindered by the failure of Armenian law to define "forced labor." (16,28,31)

The minimum age for work law does not meet international standards because labor legislation does not apply to children working in the informal sector. (28,29) In addition, the laws criminalizing commercial sexual exploitation of children are insufficient because they do not explicitly criminalize those engaging in commercial sex involving children. (31,37)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the authority of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MLSA)	Oversees child welfare issues and develops labor legislation policy. (1) Works to identify vulnerable populations, such as laborers in animal husbandry, those who are outside of the education system, and those attending schools for students with disabilities and behavioral issues. (38)
Health and Labor Inspection Body (HLIB)	Ensures compliance with legal requirements in the fields of healthcare and labor law. (1) Responds to labor complaints through administrative proceedings. (2,8) Publishes an annual report on activities undertaken the previous year and plans for the upcoming year. (2,39) Operates a complaint hotline and online platform to which individuals can submit complaints. (2)
General Department of Criminal Police	Enforces laws against the worst forms of child labor and refers identified crimes to the Investigative Committee for further investigation. (2,40) Enforces anti-human trafficking laws and conducts preliminary investigations of alleged trafficking in persons cases. Every regional police unit throughout the country has a designated officer whose portfolio includes human trafficking. (40) All cases suspected to be human trafficking are referred to the anti-trafficking unit within the National Police's Department to Fight Against Crimes Against Human Beings and Property. (40,41) Through the Department on Defending the Rights of Minors and Combating Domestic Violence Within the Police, identifies and conducts preliminary investigation of crimes in which children are victims or perpetrators. (42) Operates a hotline to receive complaints related to human trafficking and migration issues. (9,40,43)
Department for the Investigation of Trafficking in Persons, Crimes Against the Sexual Inviolability of Minors and Illegal Drug Trafficking Crimes within the Investigative Committee	Conducts in-depth investigations of all cases of human trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children referred to the Investigative Committee by the police. (40,41)

In 2021, the MLSA funded and conducted trainings for employees of childcare institutions, social workers, and first responders on identifying and addressing human trafficking and labor exploitation. MLSA experts also worked with other agencies to identify children from vulnerable groups who have dropped out of school and are at higher risk of exploitation. (11)

During the reporting period, the HLIB was empowered to launch administrative procedures and on-site inspections in response to complaints, including child labor complaints. HLIB is also authorized to issue penalties for any administrative violations they uncover and to refer cases to criminal law enforcement when appropriate. (44) When performing routine inspections, HLIB must inform employers of an upcoming inspection 3 business days in advance, and legislation limits to a legally predetermined checklist of issues the questions inspectors can ask. (40,45) HLIB has broader authority when responding to a complaint, in which case HLIB may issue notification to the employer via e-mail and immediately conduct a site visit. However, if the business director or acting director is not present and does not receive the notification, inspectors are not allowed to start. (1,44) In addition, during routine inspections inspectors follow a predetermined checklist for specific industries or the Law on Administrative Proceedings, whereas when responding to a complaint, they are not restricted to a predetermined checklist. (1,44) To streamline future labor inspections, the government is set to finalize a single universal checklist on labor law violations to be applied across all sectors in 2022. (1)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, the lack of authorization to conduct unannounced inspections in Armenia may have impeded the enforcement of child labor laws (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In 2021, HLIB had funding to employ 92 labor inspectors, of which 50 positions were filled. (1) The number of labor inspectors actually employed by HLIB during the reporting period is likely insufficient for the size of Armenia's workforce, which includes around 1.3 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 20,000 workers in transition economies, Armenia would need to employ about 66 labor inspectors. (46,47) The government reports that their funding is sufficient to carry out their mandate, and that inspectors are provided with sufficient office space, vehicles, fuel, and other technical equipment. HLIB regularly holds seminars and various discussion sessions for regional labor inspectors who are informed about legislative changes affecting their responsibilities. (1) While HLIB continued to focus on enforcing regulations related to the COVID-19 pandemic throughout 2021, the body also continued a variety of awareness-raising activities during the year, including on child labor laws. In addition to conducting outreach through social media and traditional media, HLIB targeted agricultural regions during the harvest season to inform local government representatives and others about children's rights. (1)

HLIB also entered into an agreement with the Agricultural University through which they hosted 35 students for an internship, during which students received training on child labor and trafficking in persons. The government has announced that they intend to conduct a similar program in 2022 with the State Economic University. (1)

In 2021, HLIB carried out 29 scheduled, on-site inspections and initiated 515 administrative proceedings. The inspections primarily targeted mining and manufacturing businesses and related to the protection of workers' health and safety. (1) As a result of one administrative proceeding, HLIB identified a minor who was contracted to work overtime and at night, in contravention of labor legislation, and imposed a fine on the minor's employer. The high number of administrative proceedings relative to on-site inspections is due in part to the lack of approved checklists in many spheres. (1)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Armenia took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including deficient structures for investigation planning.

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (8,38)	Yes (1)

During the reporting period, authorities investigated three cases of labor exploitation. Two of the cases were dismissed, and the third case resulted in a woman being charged for forcing her daughter to beg. (1) Another case of forced begging, initiated in 2020, resulted in a conviction during the reporting period. The individual was sentenced to 7 years imprisonment, which was later revised to 2 years of probation. (1) Authorities identified and removed four children from labor exploitation, all of whom were referred to social services. One of the children was placed in an orphanage and the remaining three were transferred to a temporary shelter to receive assistance under Armenia's Law on Assistance and Identification of Victims of Human Trafficking. (1)

Nine minor victims of human trafficking were identified by authorities—seven boys who were subjected to labor trafficking, and two girls, one of whom was trafficked for labor and the other for commercial sexual exploitation. Authorities reported an increase in the use of social media to coerce and blackmail vulnerable individuals into sex trafficking. (11)

In 2021, the Academy of Justice held trainings for 34 investigators on assisting children who have been the victims of crime. Topics addressed in the trainings included the identification of child victims and the protection of children's rights through all stages of the investigation and trial. (1) However, law enforcement officials may not receive sufficient specialized training on interviewing survivors of child trafficking, which in some cases can prevent local investigators from collecting sufficient evidence to build a prosecutable case. (9) Although the Criminal Procedural Code includes provisions to protect witnesses and minimize victim re-traumatization, the government may not employ these measures in all human trafficking cases, including those involving minors. (43,48)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including a lack of efforts to address all forms of child labor.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Ministerial Council to Combat Human Trafficking	Implements, coordinates, and monitors government efforts on trafficking in persons. Chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister. (43,49) The Council was active during the reporting period. (50)
Interagency Working Group Against Trafficking in Persons	Advises and organizes the Ministerial Council to Combat Human Trafficking, and implements decisions made by the Council. Chaired by MLSA. (14,40,49) The working group was active during the reporting period. (11)
Referral Mechanism for Minor Victims of Trafficking in Persons	Oversees the process by which minor victims are referred to the victim identification committee and are provided assistance. The referral mechanism continued to serve minor survivors of trafficking in persons during 2021. (1,2,14)

Armenia lacks coordinating mechanisms to address other forms of child labor, including street work, the services sector, and agriculture. (13)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including insufficient mainstreaming of child labor issues into relevant policies.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan Against Trafficking in Persons (2020–2022)	Supports the development of policy and the implementation of activities to address human trafficking. Commits the government to train specialists in multiple spheres, including law enforcement, the courts, educators, and medical providers. (14,38) In 2021, activities conducted under the National Action Plan included awareness raising and assistance. (11)
National Strategy for Child Rights Protection (2017–2021)	Promoted a unified state policy for the protection of the rights and interests of the child. Included an action plan that called for the development and introduction of oversight and monitoring mechanisms to prevent the involvement of children in the worst forms of child labor. (1,21) In 2021, the Armenian government requested the assistance of UNICEF to conduct an independent evaluation of the program. (1)

Under the National Action Plan, the government organized and funded a nationwide awareness-raising campaign from July 30 to December 2. As part of this campaign, multiple government ministries collaborated to produce four radio broadcasts and seven public service announcements on human trafficking. (11) The government also distributed 200 posters on addressing human trafficking and assistance available to survivors, and conducted seminars for social workers, first responders, high-school children and their parents, children living in special daycare facilities under MLSA oversight, and trafficking hotline operators. Finally, classes on trafficking topics were introduced as part of the middle and high school civics curricula. (11)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of programs to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Family Benefits Program†	Seeks to mitigate poverty for families with children by giving families a monthly payment based on their financial situation, the number of children in the family, and the geographical location of their home. (51) Research was unable to determine the impact of this ongoing program on child labor.
UNICEF Country Program for 2021–2025	Improves child protection systems, including through expanding programs for children in extreme poverty, improving social integration of children with disabilities, and developing a victim witness protection system. The original country program expired and a new one came into effect in 2021. (1,52)
Shelter for Victims of Human Trafficking†	A government-funded shelter operated in partnership with NGOs that provides medical, psychological, social, and legal services to survivors of human trafficking, and access to education for children. In 2021, continued to provide services to survivors of trafficking in persons. (1,2,14,15)

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (51)

To address at-risk youth issues, including children with disabilities and those experiencing mental and psychological violence, the government launched programs to facilitate institutionalized children's return to their families and established 17 regional centers throughout the country to provide pedagogical and psychological support. (1)

Although the Government of Armenia has implemented programs to address child labor, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children engaged in child labor in street work or in agriculture. In addition, personnel and resources are insufficient to meet the needs of many social services programs, and participation is low due to a lack of awareness-raising outreach by the government. (15)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Armenia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In 2021, Azerbaijan made minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government increased its provision of training to address human trafficking and the Ministry of Labor and Social Protection of Population began developing a new Decent Work Country Program in conjunction with the International Labour Organization. However, despite new initiatives to address child labor, Azerbaijan is assessed as having made only minimal advancement because it has not rescinded a law that delays advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. In 2017, the government extended a moratorium on labor inspections, including worksite inspections, until 2021. During the reporting period, the moratorium was then extended through January 1, 2023. There was no indication of when onsite inspections would resume, and while inspectors can conduct desk reviews in response to complaints, this lack of proactive or onsite inspection mechanisms may leave potential violations of child labor laws undetected in workplaces. Children in Azerbaijan are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging. Coordinating bodies, including the State Committee on Family, Women and Children's Affairs, lack the capacity to effectively carry out their mandates. In addition, police often treat children forced to beg or engage in street work as a family issue, leading to some cases not being properly referred for criminal investigation and prosecution; however, police took initial steps in 2021 to identify child victims of forced begging and refer them to local shelters for assistance.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Azerbaijan are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging. (I-9) Table I provides key indicators on children's work and education in Azerbaijan.

Table I. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	4.5 (70,034)
Attending School (%)	6 to 14	94.3
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	4.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		99.5

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor ‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-3,8,19) Forced begging (3,7,8,19,20)

Child labor in Azerbaijan occurs in the agriculture sector; however, there are limited data available to indicate how many children are currently engaged in child labor in this or other sectors. (3,6,7,21) Although the prevalence of child labor in cotton harvesting appears to be small, there were reports in 2019 and 2020 that children under age 15 worked picking cotton and other crops to augment family incomes; however, no new reports were identified in 2021. (3,19,22,23) Survey research conducted in 2019 by the State Committee for Family, Women and Child Affairs (SCFWCA) in three cities and five districts found that children under age 17 work in the household or in family businesses. Respondents reported that children who work outside the home do so to financially support their families. (24)

Crop production in Azerbaijan is governed by a "priority" system that conditions agricultural subsidies, services, and access to public resources, such as irrigation water, on whether farmers produce one or more crops that the government has designated as high priority. (3) In some cases, regional and local government officials are held responsible for mobilizing sufficient labor to meet established production targets for one or more of these priority crops. (25-29) This system creates a risk that farmers and local officials may turn to exploitative labor practices, including child labor and forced labor, to ensure they are able to meet production targets for designated crops. (22,29)

Street children, some of whom become homeless after they are released from government-run care institutions, and children from marginalized communities are particularly vulnerable to human trafficking within Azerbaijan. (1,2,9,12,30,31) NGOs report that children who are forced to beg often show signs of sexual abuse. (32)

Although Article 5 of the Education Law guarantees free universal education, undocumented children and children with disabilities face difficulty accessing education. Children without identification documents are ineligible to enroll in school, which continues to disproportionately affect children referred to shelters for minors. (19) The court proceedings required to secure identification documents can take up to 2 or more years, during which time children cannot attend school. Although government-run shelters are able to provide interim individual education services while undocumented children await identification papers, NGO-run shelters lack the capacity to provide such services. (3,19) Some children with disabilities are not in school, or are facing barriers to education that include inaccessibility within the physical infrastructure of schools, lack of specialized training for teachers on inclusive education, and a general social stigma against individuals with disabilities. (21,33) Children from the Roma ethnic community also face barriers to education due to social stigma. (12) In addition, children in some rural areas have low rates of school attendance. (19) Children not attending school are vulnerable to child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Azerbaijan has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 42 and 249 of the Labor Code; Article 192 of the Code of Administrative Offenses (34,35)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 250 of the Labor Code; Article 192 of the Code of Administrative Offenses (34,35)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Articles 98, 250–252, and 254 of the Labor Code; Decree 58 of the Cabinet of Ministers in 2000; Article 9 of the Law on the Rights of the Child (34,36,37)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 35 of the Constitution; Article 144-2 of the Criminal Code (38,39)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		The Law on Trafficking in Persons; Article 144-1 of the Criminal Code (39,40)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Articles 144-1 and 171 of the Criminal Code (39)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 28 of the Law on the Rights of the Child; Article 170 of the Criminal Code (37,39)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	19	Article 36 of the Law on Military Obligation and Military Service (41)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	Yes		Articles 2, 3, and 12 of the Law on Military Obligation and Military Service (41)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Article 116 of the Criminal Code (39)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15‡	Article 19 of the Law on Education; Article 13 of the Law on General Education (42,43)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 5 and 19 of the Law on Education; Article 13 of the Law on General Education; Article 22 of the Law on the Rights of the Child; Article 42 of the Constitution (37,38,42,43)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (42,43)

The laws criminalizing commercial sexual exploitation of children are insufficient because the crime of involving a child in prostitution established by Criminal Code Article 171 does not criminalize the users (clients) of prostitution involving children. Similarly, the criminalization of involvement of a child in "immoral actions" does not clearly criminalize the use or offering of a child for the production of pornography or pornographic performances. (39)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, the absence of worksite inspections conducted at the national level in Azerbaijan may impede the enforcement of child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Protection of Population (MLSP)	Enforces labor laws related to the worst forms of child labor through the State Labor Inspection Service. (19,44)
Ministry of Internal Affairs (MOIA)	Functions as the central executive agency responsible for public security and the prevention of criminal offenses, including child trafficking and begging. (19,20,44) Through the Anti-Trafficking Division (ATD), enforces human trafficking laws, investigates human trafficking violations, and enforces criminal laws related to the use of children in illicit activities. (1,8,19) Refers children who are survivors of human trafficking to social services for assistance with school enrollment, participation in recreational activities, and procurement of proper documentation. (1)
National Referral Mechanism for Trafficking in Persons	Refers victims of human trafficking to the relevant authorities to ensure the protection of their rights. (20,45,46) Refers human trafficking cases to ATD for investigation. (1)

Sources report a lack of coordination between law enforcement agencies. (19)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, the absence of worksite inspections conducted at the national level in Azerbaijan may have impeded the enforcement of child labor laws (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Complaint Mechanism Exists	Yes (16,21,47,48)	Yes (19)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	Yes (14,21)	Yes (19)

The government suspended all routine and unannounced labor inspections in 2016 as part of a broader anti-corruption drive. In 2017, this moratorium was extended until 2021 as part of an effort to stimulate small and medium business growth and remained in force during the reporting period. (1,16,24,47,51) In early 2022, the government then extended this moratorium through January 1, 2023. (52) In addition, there have been no indicators as to when the government anticipates a resumption of onsite inspections. (49,50) Although the State Labor Inspection Service (SLIS) is still able to receive and respond to complaints, this response cannot include onsite inspections, and inspectors are limited to conducting desk reviews. Instead, the SLIS investigates complaints by requesting information from the employer in question and, if necessary, relevant employees. (47-51) Based on information received, inspectors are empowered to identify violations and impose appropriate penalties. The SLIS can impose penalties directly against individuals but must refer cases to the courts to levy penalties against corporate entities. (47) The SLIS is also able to detect potential minimum age violations by monitoring an electronic database of labor contracts, but did not have the authority to impose penalties related to violations detected in this manner during the reporting period. (47)

The government did not provide information on labor inspectorate funding for inclusion in this report. The government has also reported that the SLIS is required to establish assessment criteria for determining a risk-based routine inspection plan before routine inspections could resume. Approval of the draft criteria may permit the SLIS to resume limited labor inspections for occupational safety and health issues, including hazardous child labor. (24)

During the reporting period, the Ministry of Labor and Social Protection of Population (MLSP) identified one case of a child under age 15 working in retail trade. The company was fined $882 (AZN 1,500) in accordance with Article 192.8 of the Code of Administrative Offenses. (19)

The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Azerbaijan's workforce, which includes approximately 5 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 20,000 workers in transition economies, Azerbaijan would need to employ about 256 labor inspectors. (53) Government officials also assess the number of inspectors as insufficient to fully enforce child labor laws in Azerbaijan. (54)

During the reporting period, the Cabinet of Ministers prepared a new draft resolution to determine risk groups to prioritize reviews of certain industries for labor law compliance. (19)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Azerbaijan took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including a lack of investigations pertaining to child labor.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Yes (21)	Yes (19)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A	Yes (19)
Refresher Courses Provided	Yes (32)	Yes (19)
Number of Investigations	2 (21,32,55)	0 (19)
Number of Violations Found	2 (21,32)	0 (19)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	0 (21)	0 (19)
Number of Convictions	1 (21)	1 (19)
Imposed Penalties for Violations Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Yes (21)	Yes (19)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (32)	Yes (19)

Although the government previously reported identifying one case of child commercial sexual exploitation in 2019 and five cases in 2018, the status of these cases is unknown. (3,31) In 2021, the government convicted one individual of subjecting two children to forced labor in 2020, sentencing him to 7 year's imprisonment. (19) The Ministry of Internal Affairs (MOIA) noted that some monitoring activities to detect the worst forms of child labor, especially commercial sexual exploitation of children, were partially suspended for portions of the reporting period due to the COVID-19 pandemic. (32)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

During the reporting period, a number of government training programs on migration law, human trafficking, labor rights, and women's and children's rights were offered to judges, lawyers, and representatives of academic institutions. (18)

In some cases, police treat children begging or engaging in street work as a family issue, rather than screening for indicators of forced begging. As a result, these situations are often referred to the Commission on Juvenile Issues and Protection of Minors' Rights for coordination of services, rather than to law enforcement agencies for investigation and, when warranted, criminal prosecution of forced begging cases. (1,31,46) In addition, research found that police declined to investigate the majority of forced begging cases referred to them and that children identified in child labor resumed work almost immediately after being identified by law enforcement officials. (3,54,56) Also, child labor law enforcement efforts are concentrated in Baku, with few investigations undertaken outside the capital. (30) The MOIA operates a 24-hour hotline for the public to report suspected child trafficking and instances of child begging. (19)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including a lack of efficacy in accomplishing mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Commission on Juvenile Issues and Protection of Minors' Rights	Coordinates policies at the national level to protect children from the worst forms of child labor. Located within the Cabinet of Ministers and acts as a national-level version of district-level Commissions on Juvenile Issues and Protection of Minors' Rights, which are located in individual district Executive Commissions. (3) During the reporting period, the Commission met with NGOs, child protection agencies, and local representatives of educational, social, and health agencies to establish a social work coordination mechanism. In 2021, as a result of this new coordination mechanism, social workers visited the families of at-risk children to provide them with social services. (19)
National Coordinator and Interagency Commission to Combat Trafficking in Human Beings	Coordinates policies to counter trafficking in persons and oversees implementation of the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Human Beings. Led by MOIA's ATD and includes representatives from MLSP, Prosecutor General's Office, State Border and Migration Services, Ministry of Youth and Sports, and other government entities. (3,32) During the reporting period, the National Coordinator continued to preside over the work of the 32 government agencies involved in implementing the 2020–2024 National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking. (19)
State Committee on Family, Women, and Children's Affairs (SCFWCA)	Coordinates child-related policies, including research on child labor. Works with local governments, particularly district-level Executive Commissions, to coordinate policies related to children and gather data on the situation of children and families in rural areas. (3) During the reporting period, the Committee continued to conduct activities to increase awareness of child labor, particularly in rural populations, including a 2-day informational workshop for child and family support centers throughout the country. (19,24,57)

In 2021, the Government of Azerbaijan improved its provision of training and coordination to address human trafficking, organizing trainings for personnel in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the MOIA, the Ministry of Health, the Prosecutor General's Office, the State Border Service, the State Migration Service, and the MLSP. (20) Although Commissions on Juvenile Issues and Protection of Minors' Rights exist at both the national and local levels, research was unable to determine the relationship between these respective national and local coordinating bodies. (3) In addition, sources report that the efficacy of SCFWCA as a coordinating body is limited. (3,54) Although the SCFWCA is empowered to work with district-level Executive Committees to coordinate policy and research related to children, the body has limited capacity to do so. (3)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including lack of coverage for all worst forms of child labor.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Human Beings (2020–2024)	Aims to further government efforts to address human trafficking through enhanced coordination between relevant government agencies and improved protection for human trafficking victims. Includes action items to improve services for child trafficking victims, address forced child begging, and research and monitor forced labor and child trafficking risks. (58) The government continued to implement the National Action Plan during the reporting period. (20)
Strategy on Children of the Republic of Azerbaijan (2020–2030)	Aims to improve child protection mechanisms and legislation. Through associated National Action Plan for implementation, includes action items on implementing international commitments under ILO Convention 182 and enhancing coordination to detect and prevent child labor and commercial sexual exploitation of children. (59,60) During the reporting period, the national Early Childhood Development program was launched as part of the Strategy. Jointly organized by SCFWCA, the EU delegation to Azerbaijan, the Regional Development Public Union, and UNICEF Azerbaijan, the program aims in part to increase the capacity of children's services professionals and raise awareness around the health and education of children in four target regions—Ganja, Shirvan, Aghjabadi, and Absheron. (61) In addition, a draft Children's Code was prepared by relevant government agencies. (19)
State Program on Improvement of Official Statistics in the Republic of Azerbaijan (2018–2025)	Aims to improve and further develop the national statistics system. Includes an action item on developing a methodology for studying child labor and conducting survey research on the prevalence of child labor in Azerbaijan. (62) During the reporting period, the State Statistical Committee's Council met to discuss the improvement of database management for a number of government agencies, including MLSPP. (63)
State Program for the Development of Inclusive Education for Children with Disabilities (2018–2024)	Aims to create inclusive education for children with disabilities. Currently, the government has established eight schools with inclusive classrooms, spread across seven regions. The government reported it is planning further pilot programs at 12 additional schools, including training teachers in inclusive teaching methods. (44,64,65) The policy was active during the reporting period. (3,44)

‡ The government has other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (24,66)

The government has adopted the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Human Beings (2020–2024) and the Strategy on Children (2020–2030). Although the government amended the labor code in 2020 to prohibit children under the age of 18 from engaging in work in difficult or harmful working conditions, the law does not specifically mention agriculture and research found no policy on hazardous child labor, including in agriculture. (19)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including insufficient funding.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Social Shelter and Rehabilitation Center for Minors†	MLSPP-run shelter in Baku for vulnerable children, including street children. (3,44) Children are able to stay in these shelters until they turn the age of 18. The shelter was active during the reporting period. (20)
Victims Assistance Centers†	Provide direct social services and social services referrals to survivors of human trafficking, including children. Funded by MLSPP. (47) The centers were active during the reporting period. (20)
Targeted Social Assistance Program†	MLSPP-run program that provides cash transfers to families. (1) The government continued to provide financial assistance to vulnerable families in 2021. (67,68)
MOIA Identification Document Program†	Provides identification documents to undocumented minors who may be street children or victims of human trafficking. (54) Research was unable to determine whether the program was active during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Azerbaijan.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (2,14,24,44)

In 2021, the MLSPP began developing a new Decent Work Country Program in conjunction with the ILO. (69)

During the reporting period, the government approved an increase in benefit payments for families receiving state assistance, including families with children with disabilities and low-income families. (67) In July 2021, two NGOs (the "Clean World" Aid to Women Public Union and the Azerbaijan Children's Union) hosted a workshop for vulnerable children on the World Day Against Trafficking in Persons. Children from two shelters in Baku learned about children's rights during the workshop, which was jointly organized by the IOM. (70) Additionally, the MOIA assisted the Azerbaijan Children's Union with construction of a new shelter for at-risk children. (19)

During the reporting period, the government provided approximately $17,000 to a local NGO to help it buy land to build a new shelter. The government provided additional grants to several other anti-trafficking NGOs. (20) However, the level of government support for NGO-run shelters is inconsistent. (2) Directors of these shelters note that the unpredictable nature of funding prevents long-term planning and capacity building of shelters, including those that serve child victims. In addition, the number of social workers with training in supporting vulnerable and at-risk children is likely inadequate. (2,32,66,71)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Azerbaijan (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

In 2021, Bangladesh made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. In early 2022, the government ratified International Labor Organization Convention No. 138: Convention Concerning Minimum Age for Admission to Employment and the International Labor Organization Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labor Convention. The government also removed 5,088 children in vulnerable situations from 23 districts through labor inspections. However, children in Bangladesh are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in drying of fish and the production of bricks. Children also perform dangerous tasks in the production of garments and leather goods. The Bangladesh Labor Act does not apply to the informal sector, in which most child labor in Bangladesh occurs. In addition, penalties for child labor violations can only be imposed after a lengthy legal process and, when courts do impose them, the fines are too low to deter child labor law violations. Moreover, the government did not publicly release information on its criminal law enforcement efforts related to child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bangladesh are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in drying of fish and the production of bricks.<sup>(1,2)</sup> Children also perform dangerous tasks in the production of garments and leather goods. <sup>(2,3)</sup> Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Bangladesh. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

The Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics estimated that there were 1.28 million children working in hazardous sectors before the COVID-19 pandemic, with 260,000 children working in the government's officially listed hazardous sectors. (2,8) Economic hardships and school closures brought on by the pandemic have forced many school age children to take on temporary jobs in factories, including in the garment and food processing sectors. Reports also indicate an increase in child domestic work. (2) One NGO reported that 75 percent of children had left their education program and estimated that one-third of the children either entered into hazardous work or returned to their villages. Sources further indicate that children engaged in child labor worked longer hours with fewer breaks, earned lower salaries, and faced worse conditions as a result of the pandemic. (2)

Other hazardous sectors in which children work include tanneries, shipbreaking, and the dried fish industry. (14,26,32,33) In the dried fish industry, children work all day without protective gear and are exposed to the insecticide DDT (dichloro-diphenyl-trichloroethane), salt, and the sun. (26,34) In the shipbreaking sector, children are exposed to toxic materials such as asbestos, work in dangerous conditions without personal protective equipment, and often work at night. (20) Children who work in tanneries lack protective equipment and experience continuous exposure to heavy metals, formaldehyde, and other hazardous substances. (35,36) In addition, children working in informal garment production work as many as 16 hours a day and often carry heavy loads, use hazardous machinery, and handle chemicals without protective equipment. (11,37)

Reports of violence against child workers in various sectors, including in domestic work, have also been documented. (14,21,38-40) In 2018, a survey by an international organization found more than 400,000 children in domestic work in Bangladesh. Some girls are forced into domestic work and are abused by their employers. (2,4,30,31) According to reports, from January to November 2021, 28 children were tortured while working as housemaids. (2) Throughout Bangladesh, street children are coerced into criminality or forced to beg, and masters of begging rings sometimes maim children to increase earnings. Children are also forced, especially in border areas, to produce and transport drugs, especially “yaba” tablets (methamphetamine). (1,2)

Children throughout Bangladesh are sexually exploited through the country’s legal and illegal brothels, and child commercial sexual exploitation remained widespread during the reporting period. (1) According to some estimates, 30,000 girls are sexually exploited in Bangladesh, many of whom work in brothels but also at parking lots, bus stations, and online. (2) False promises of work are used to lure poor women and children into exploitation, and oftentimes these women and girls, some as young as age 10, are charged exorbitant and fabricated debts they must work to repay. Reports have indicated that some police accept bribes to not check documentation that workers in registered brothels were older than 18 years and to procure falsified documents for younger workers. (1) Women and children living on the street or struggling economically and children fleeing abusive child marriages are especially vulnerable to being sold to brothels for commercial sexual exploitation. Some children of sex workers are also put to work in brothels and made to take steroids to appear older. (1) In addition, children are trafficked to India where they are forced into labor or commercial sexual exploitation. (9) Research has found that Internet-based trafficking in persons increased during the pandemic, with human traffickers adapting to technology by using popular apps to connect with victims. (41)

Although the 2010 National Education Policy raised the age of compulsory education from fifth grade (age 10) to eighth grade (age 14), the new compulsory education scheme is not enforceable until the legal framework is changed to reflect the revised policy. (19) Research has found many schools are overcrowded and over 80 percent run double shifts. Further, the Teacher Training Institute cannot keep up with the demand for teachers, particularly in rural areas. (9) Bangladesh has 57 Primary Teacher Training Institutes, each of which is expected to enroll 200 potential teachers to accommodate the higher compulsory education age. However, an average of seven instructors are responsible for training over 400 teachers at a time. (2) Furthermore, to accommodate the larger number of students receiving compulsory education, Bangladesh is building new schools for students in higher grades. In fiscal year 2020–2021, Bangladesh constructed 12,723 new classrooms, established 10,000 sanitation facilities, and installed tube wells in over 6,500 schools. (12)

In 2021, limited access to education as a consequence of the pandemic continued to impact children in Bangladesh. School closures due to new variants of coronavirus increased the risk of school dropouts and child labor. (42) Many children joined the workforce in formal and informal sectors to provide for their families struggling during the pandemic, and are unlikely to return to their studies. (43) While televised and online classes were made available to students in grades 1 through 10, the distance learning program did not adequately reach the most vulnerable children. Reports indicated that 53 percent of children whose parents work in the garment sector did not receive any online classes, and most children opted to work with limited position to return to school. (44) In addition to pandemic-related closures, children in Bangladesh face barriers to education such as high costs for transportation, uniforms, and stationary. (2,42) According to reports, in fiscal year 2020–2021, approximately 367,000 eligible children did not enroll in school for the academic period. (12) Additionally, research has shown that about 2.5 million school-age children remain out of formal education, with the current drop-out rate for primary education at around 18 percent, which is higher than for secondary education. (45)

Over 450,000 Rohingya children are living in refugee camps in Bangladesh following the Burmese military's ethnic cleansing operations. Children residing in the camps are vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor. (2,25,46–49) Rohingya girls are trafficked from the refugee camps for commercial sexual exploitation in Bangladesh, India, and Nepal. In some cases, girls are promised jobs in domestic service but are instead forced into commercial sexual exploitation. (1) Rohingya children recruited to work outside the refugee camps are reported to be underpaid or unpaid, unable to communicate with their families, and subjected to excessive working hours. (25,50) Rohingya boys typically work in construction, fishing, and shops. (23,31) Rohingya children are also sold by their parents into bonded labor in the fish drying industry, primarily in Cox's Bazar. Bonded laborers—both Bangladeshi children and Rohingya refugee children—work to pay off their parents' debts over a 9-month fishing season. (10,23) There are reports of Bangladeshi officials taking bribes to facilitate the trafficking of Rohingya children, including providing access for human traffickers to refugee camps. (2)

Rohingya refugee children are also not permitted to attend primary and secondary schools in Bangladesh, including private institutions, due to their lack of documentation. (22) In addition, due to the pandemic, the government began restricting humanitarian access, including education and protection programs. As a result, refugee children are more vulnerable to exploitation and less able to access humanitarian assistance. (49) The government had in the past permitted international organizations, such as UNICEF, UNESCO, and UNHCR, to provide some basic education services to primary school-age Rohingya children, and some university-level students who received scholarships. (19,22,49) The government had also agreed to allow international partners to implement the Myanmar Curriculum Pilot in 2020. (19) However, the program was put on hold as a result of the pandemic and in December 2021, the Government of Bangladesh ordered the authorities to shut down all refugee-run learning and coaching centers, further hampering educational accessibility for Rohingya refugees. ### II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Bangladesh has ratified key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

On January 20, 2022, Bangladesh ratified the ILO Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labor Convention, 1930. (53,54) In March 2022, Bangladesh also ratified the ILO C. 138 on Minimum Age. (55)

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Bangladesh's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the minimum age for work.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation

In 2021, the Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments (DIFE) developed a proposal to update its list of hazardous sectors. If finalized by the Ministry of Labor and Employment (MOLE), these sectors would include drying fish, stone quarries, local tailoring, brick breaking, street-based work for children, stone collection, garbage picking and waste disposal, and informal tailoring in the clothing sector. (2,43,70)

Bangladesh's laws governing the minimum age for work do not protect children engaged in informal work. Regulations defining hazardous work do not include a number of sectors in which children are known to undertake dangerous tasks and work for long hours, including garments, drying fish, or brick manufacturing. (1,2,18,37,57,71) Furthermore, the Bangladesh Labor Act does not cover children working in the informal sector. However, 93 percent of child labor occurs in the informal sector, including domestic work, street work, and work on small agricultural farms. (1,2,56)

Bangladesh prohibits, but does not criminalize, the use of children in pornographic performances and in the production of drugs. (67) Sources indicate that the minimum age for recruitment in the Army is age 17 and requires parental consent and birth documents verifying age. (64) Army recruitment and training take 1 year, ensuring that recruits reach the age of 18 before entering regular duty. (65) However, the minimum age for recruitment in the Air Force is age 16. (63) In addition, the legal framework of the Bangladesh constitution does not criminally prohibit the recruitment of children by non-state armed groups. (67)

The Primary Education (Compulsory) Act only requires guardians to enroll children ages 6 to 10 in primary education where it is compulsory. It does not appear that there are laws providing for compulsory education, though the 2010 National Education Policy provided for compulsory education to eighth grade (age 14). (19,72) The compulsory education age is lower than the minimum age for work, making children ages 10 to 14 vulnerable to child labor, as they are not required to attend school but are not legally permitted to work. (19,72)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments (DIFE)	Located within the Ministry of Labor and Employment (MOLE). (72) Enforces labor laws, including those relating to child labor and hazardous work. (73) DIFE manages the "16357" hotline through which workers can report child labor violations in the garment sector. (2,74)
Bangladesh Police	Enforce Penal Code provisions protecting children from forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation. (14) Through its Trafficking in Persons Monitoring Cell, investigate cases of human trafficking and enforce the Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking Act's anti-human trafficking provisions. (75)
Bangladesh Labor Court	Prosecutes labor law violations, including those related to child labor; and imposes fines or sanctions against employers. (76)
Child Protection Networks	Respond to violations against children, including child labor. Comprising officials from various agencies with mandates to protect children, prosecute violations, monitor interventions, and develop referral mechanisms between law enforcement and social welfare services at the district and sub-district levels. (77)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Bangladesh took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the DIFE's authority that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including a lack of reciprocal referral mechanism between labor authorities and social services.

† Data are from July 1, 2019, to June 30, 2020.

‡ Data for Labor Inspectorate funding are from July 1, 2020, to June 30, 2021. Other data are from July 1, 2020, to December 31, 2021.

Bangladesh employs 305 labor inspectors for a workforce of over 69.8 million workers. (70,80) According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Bangladesh would need to employ about 1,745 labor inspectors for Bangladesh's workforce. (80) The shortage in human resources and high turnovers at the DIFE have led the agency to exclude around 95 percent of industrial and commercial establishments from its inspection list. (2) Sources also indicate that DIFE is insufficiently funded and inspectors are reluctant to enforce labor laws. (9)

The DIFE is only authorized to conduct unannounced inspections outside the export processing zones and special economic zones. (9,81,82) The lack of routine unannounced inspections in all sectors allows employers to hide child laborers. (23) Sources report that garment factories producing for local markets are rarely inspected despite a high prevalence of child labor. (9) Some employers move children to night shifts to evade inspectors, as night inspections are only conducted until 8 p.m. (9,20) In addition, the penalty for a child labor law violation carries a maximum fine of approximately $59 (5,000 taka), which is insufficient to deter violations. (9,56,81,83)

The government reported that in fiscal year July 2020–June 2021, labor inspections helped remove 5,088 children in vulnerable situations from 23 districts. (2) In addition, 1,937 children have been removed from the automobile, bricks and stone crushing, engineering workshops, bakeries, hotel and restaurants, and plastics sectors, among others, in fiscal year 2021–2022 until December 2021. (78) According to the MOLE, out of the 1,421 cases filed for criminal labor infractions, 98 were child labor violations. (70) While a previous reciprocal referral mechanism existed between labor authorities and social services, DIFE lacks an active referral and rehabilitation system for children. Employers of children get off with a warning and the rescued children are found in the same factory or nearby a few days after the inspection. (2)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Bangladesh took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including the lack of publicly released criminal law enforcement information.

The government constituted and funded seven anti-trafficking in persons tribunals to handle human trafficking cases that were functioning and hearing cases as of August 2021. (41) During the reporting period, UNODC in collaboration with the Government of Bangladesh organized special training for investigating officers and prosecutors from the anti-trafficking tribunals to increase cooperation and center victim voices. (84)

In 2021, a small number of high-profile cases in which police arrested factory owners for alleged abuse of child workers made international headlines. Bangladesh police filed a criminal complaint against 8 factory management team members, including the owner, after a factory fire killed at least 52 people, including 19 children between the ages of 12 and 18. (2, 11, 85, 86) Abdul Hashem, the factory owner, was required to pay $2,334 to each of the victims' families. However, in order to receive the compensation, survivors and their families were required to forgo any future claims against the company and its executives. (86) In addition, in January 2021, police arrested a brick kiln owner for torturing and confining children in chains. (86) Police rescued 2 children ages 8 and 9, whom the owner had bought through brokers and forced them to work against their will. The suspect remains in custody while under prosecution. (85) In addition, in the reporting period, 43 individual defendants were prosecuted in cases related to child trafficking for labor exploitation. (86)

The Government of Bangladesh did not provide specific information on criminal law enforcement efforts against child labor crimes for inclusion in this report. Reports have suggested that investigation coordination between agencies and authorities is lacking. (2) Many cases are resolved through mediation and settlement rather than prosecution, resulting in low conviction rates for violence against child workers. (2) Cases resulting in convictions usually have fines that are minimal and perpetrators are not regularly sentenced to jail for employing children. (19) Reports also suggest that criminal investigators do not receive sufficient training on addressing child labor. (2)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including a lack of capacity to assist citizens abroad who are victims of labor exploitation.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Child Labor Welfare Council	Coordinates efforts undertaken by the government to guide and monitor the implementation of the National Plan of Action on the Elimination of Child Labor. Chaired by MOLE, comprising officials representing relevant government ministries, international organizations, child advocacy groups, and employer and worker organizations. (87) During the reporting period, the Council held several meetings of district commissioners and secretaries of MOLE to raise awareness about child labor. (2) MOLE ensured better coordination for the implementation of the National Plan of Action on the Elimination of Child Labor. (2)
Counter-Trafficking National Coordination Committee, Ministry of Home Affairs (MOHA)	Coordinates the work of government agencies and international and local NGOs on international and domestic human trafficking, including child trafficking, through bi-monthly meetings. Oversees district counter-trafficking committees, which manage counter-trafficking committees for sub-districts and smaller administrative units. (75) In the reporting period, the agency held meetings at the district level and conducted site visits to raise awareness regarding child labor. (2)
Rescue, Recovery, Repatriation, and Integration Task Force	Coordinates efforts by the Governments of Bangladesh and India to rescue, recover, repatriate, and reintegrate survivors of human trafficking, particularly women and children, between the two countries. Liaises with various ministries, government departments, NGOs, and international organizations that assist trafficked children. (50,88,89) However, the government lacks the capacity to assist its citizens abroad who are victims of labor exploitation, case management systems have not been developed, and the process to repatriate human trafficking victims is lengthy. (89,90) The Task Force was active during the reporting period, and met bimonthly to coordinate Task Force members and their Indian counterparts. (43)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including lack of implementation.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action on the Elimination of Child Labor (2021–2025)	Identifies strategies for developing institutional capacity, increasing access to education and health services, raising social awareness, strengthening law enforcement, and creating prevention and reintegration programs. (91) During the reporting period, the Child Labor Central Monitoring Committee submitted a new draft plan of action to MOLE, and the government extended implementation of the National Plan of Action on the Elimination of Child Labor from 2021 to 2025. (9)
Eighth Five-Year Plan, "Promoting Prosperity and Fostering Inclusiveness" (2021–2025)†	Includes provisions and budget to eliminate child labor. Sets out actions to initiate registration of all child births, as well as enforce and harmonize laws against human trafficking and exploitation. (2) In March 2021, the National Economic Council approved the country's Eighth Five-Year Plan. (92)
Domestic Workers Protection and Welfare Policy 2015	Sets the minimum age at 12 years for light domestic work. All children under age 18 require parental permission to engage in domestic work. (93) However, the policy is not legally enforceable until the legal framework is changed to reflect the revised policy and DIFE still has no authority to inspect households to see the working condition of domestic workers. The Central Monitoring Cell designated for the implementation of the policy has made little progress in coordinating with various required government entities. (12) In 2021, MOLE attended events organized by NGOs and printed the policy in a brochure and distributed promotional materials to create mass awareness through DIFE's 23 District offices. (2,43)
National Plan of Action for Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking (2018–2025)	Establishes a plan to build government capacity to address trafficking in persons and provide economic and social safety nets for victims and vulnerable populations, particularly children. (94,95) Led by MOHA. The national plan has been extended to 2025 due to the slow progress made during 2020 and 2021 pandemic lockdowns. (12) During the reporting period, MOHA monitored and implemented the action plan through the GO-NGO coordination committee. MOHA also conducted consultative meetings with domestic and international organization to collect feedback on the implementation process. (43)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (96)

The National Plan of Action on the Elimination of Child Labor faces coordination and implementation challenges and research has found that MOLE is not effectively coordinating the implementation of the policy. (2,41) The government has a National Education Policy that sets the compulsory age for free education through eighth grade (age 14). However, the government has yet to include child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Education Policy. (96)

Sources reported that the National Authority, an institution that would serve as a supervisory body on addressing human trafficking, was not active or funded. (41)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Elimination of Hazardous Child Labor, Phase IV (2021–2023) †*	$33 million Government of Bangladesh-funded, 3-year project implemented by MOLE. (78) Removed 90,000 children from hazardous labor in Phases I–III by providing informal and technical education, stipends, and awareness raising for employers and families. (22,97,98) Phase IV of the Elimination of Hazardous Child Labor program was implemented in October 2021. (2,19) MOLE has signed agreements with 112 selected NGOs to remove 100,000 children from all hazardous work by providing informal education and vocational training to child laborers most at risk. (78) During the reporting period, NGOs conducted surveys to identify the most hazardous occupations. (78)
School Programs	Second Chance Education is funded by the Bangladesh Rural Advancement Committee and provides informal schooling for children from 8 to 14 years old who have dropped out of formal schools. (43) The program had aimed to reach 1,000 children in 48 centers in 2021; however, due to COVID-19 pandemic-related school closures, teachers visited students in their homes for 30 minutes per week. (2) The School Feeding Program provides fortified biscuits and mid-day meals to pre-primary and primary school children in high-poverty areas to encourage school attendance, as hunger and poverty are both drivers of child labor. This initiative has increased the school attendance rate from 5 to 13 percent. (43) In 2021, the UN World Food Program worked with the Ministry of Primary and Mass Education to scale up the school feeding program to serve more than 3 million school children at 15,788 schools in 35 districts of Bangladesh. (43)
Accelerating Protection for Children (2017–2021) †	Project funded by the government and UNICEF and implemented by the Ministry of Women and Children Affairs to provide life skills education, awareness, and self-protection techniques to adolescent girls and boys ages 10 to 19, and empower them as agents of social change to address risks and protection issues like child marriage, child labor, reproductive health, and adolescent nutrition. (19) In 2021, conducted awareness program related to child labor among 118,000 parents and 70,325 adolescents. (78) Approximately 800,000 Bangladeshis became aware of hazardous child labor through the project's radio programs. (78)
Child Sensitive Social Protection in Bangladesh (CSPB) II †	Project implemented by the Ministry of Social Welfare's Department of Social Services with support by UNICEF to strengthen social services for street children engaged in child labor including protection from violence, abuse, and exploitation; safe accommodation; food; and education (non-formal and life skills). (19) The project offers case management services to identify vulnerable children and provide intervention plans, psychological counseling through the Child Friendly Services hub, and conditional cash support to reduce child labor. (78) During the reporting period, CSPB supported 160 families to reduce child labor, prevent early marriages, and reduce school dropouts. (78) The project also offers a 24-hour emergency hotline service through Child Helpline 1098. In 2021, the helpline received 241,712 complaints and referred 13,624 calls to different services regarding child protection, rescue, and referrals are provided. (43)

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (41)

The MOLE was expected to conduct a national survey on child labor by 2021. (14) The Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics started the survey in 2022 with the support of the ILO. Research shows that survey results are expected after June 2022. (43)

Research has found that the government's social programs often align with the priorities of various funders and lack coordination among relevant ministries to address the cross-cutting nature of child labor issues. (9) In addition, DIFE maintains the 16357 hotline to receive labor law violations. During the reporting period, the 16357 hotline received 831 complaints; however, the complaints were not related to child labor. (66) Ministry of Women and Children Affairs also developed a “Joy” mobile app which provides the opportunity to record dialogue and images of child labor victims and perpetrators and send the information, including GPS location, to the National Helpline Center 109 and nearby police station. (43)

In 2021, Belize made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government developed Belize's second National Child Labor Policy with plans to begin implementation in 2022. It also launched a program with the ILO and the Belize Sugarcane Farmers Association to pilot strategies to promote employment for vulnerable youth and women in the sugarcane supply chain in northern Belize. In addition, Belize achieved its first two convictions under the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children Act. However, children in Belize are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also engage in dangerous tasks in agriculture and construction. Belize does not meet the international standard for prohibitions of hazardous work because children over age 14 are permitted to work in dangerous activities such as mining, manufacturing, and construction. In addition, the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, which may encourage children to leave school before the completion of compulsory education.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Belize are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also engage in dangerous tasks in agriculture and construction. (1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Belize.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Belize lacks a recent comprehensive child labor study, which makes it difficult to clearly determine the sectors and activities in which working children are engaged. Although there is a plan to conduct a more thorough study under the Child Labor Secretariat and Inspectorate, the last known data available are from a 2010 study on child activity funded by the ILO. (1,2)

Particularly in rural areas of Belize, many children are removed from school on their 14th birthday to work as street vendors or in the sectors of agriculture and construction. (16) Reports also showed that children in rural areas work in the agriculture and fishing industries, while children in urban areas work in the construction and tourist industries. Children work on family-owned farms and accompany adults to employment sites to assist in planting and harvesting. (1,3)

Among Belize’s ethnic groups, Mennonites have the highest percentage of child labor, with approximately 9.5 percent of Mennonite children engaged in child labor. (2,6,10,12) Non-Mennonite children are also engaged in child labor on Mennonite-owned land. (7) Children working on Mennonite land often use dangerous tools like machetes, tractors, and plows, and work long hours in the sun without proper hydration. (3,7,12) Limited reporting also indicates that boys working mainly in Mennonite communities may be involved in operating heavy machinery and flying small airplanes to spray crops. (1,2)

Children in Belize are also engaged in child labor in diving and fishing for fish, lobster, and conch. Many of these children cannot swim or may be involved in swimming at extreme depths and have been injured working with dangerous tools such as anchors, fish traps, chipping hammers, and spears. (1-3,10)

Government officials stated that there are anecdotal reports of Belize being a destination for child sexual exploitation, with reports of children being trafficked in areas frequented by tourists or seasonal workers, such as San Pedro, Punta Gorda, and Belize City. (2,13,14) There have also been instances of the "sugar daddy" phenomenon, in which a wealthy male offers to pay school fees, provide cash payments, or purchase groceries or gifts for a family in exchange for sexual favors from a young, usually female, family member. (17) Girls from impoverished communities and LGBTQI+ children are particularly vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation and labor trafficking in Belize. (14,15,18) Migrant children are trafficked in commercial sexual exploitation, with most typically originating from Guatemala, El Salvador, and Honduras. (16) A limited number of sources also indicate that boys from Belize City and San Pedro were trafficked to transport and sell drugs and firearms and commit murders as part of gang warfare. (1,2,12,15,16) These activities were more prevalent in rural communities near the Mexican and Guatemalan borders, where smuggling contraband from these countries is known to be a high-profit enterprise. (16)

In Belize, primary and secondary education is tuition free up to age 14. In areas lacking a school, the state provides free transportation for children to attend the nearest primary school. (16) Many children’s access to education is hindered by the cost of school fees, textbooks, uniforms, and meals. (15,16) In 2021, approximately 60 percent of children benefited from a secondary school subsidy of $150 per year toward education expenses. (16) Migrant children do not qualify for state benefits including tuition coverage and access to the $150 subsidies for high school students. Parents must cover these costs and pay administrative fees or opt to remove their child from school. (16) Some Spanish-speaking children face language barriers at schools that provide instruction only in English. (7) In addition, Belize lacks qualified teachers, basic supplies, and adequate facilities to educate children. (2)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Belize has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Belize's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the minimum age for hazardous work.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

While Belizean law does set the minimum legal age for work in wholesale and retail trade or business at age 14, the law is inconsistent with international standards on light work, because it allows children between the ages of 12 and 14 to engage in some activities deemed “light work”, but the types of light work permissible for children have not yet been identified. (19,20,29) Belizean law is also inconsistent with international standards on hazardous work. Children under age 14 are prohibited from working in industrial undertakings—including activities such as mining, manufacturing, and construction—but children over age 14 are permitted to work in those types of activities. (19) Although Belizean law indicates that children under age 18 are prohibited from being employed or engaged in any activity that may be detrimental to their health, education, or mental, physical, or moral development, the law does not specify which employment activities are detrimental to children. (19,21) While a hazardous work and light work list was originally drafted in 2018, legislative delays have impeded the government’s efforts to enact and amend this or other legislation addressing child labor concerns. (1,3) A list of hazardous work prohibited for all children has not been adopted as law. (29,30)

The Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Prohibition) Act and the Criminal Code prohibit all forms of child sexual exploitation, with the former explicitly prohibiting child pornography. (23,24) However, consensual sex with children ages 16 or 17 is permitted, including in cases in which a person gives or promises remuneration, goods, food, or other benefits in exchange for the sexual act. This provision leaves children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. (23,30)

The Government of Belize is currently conducting consultations on potential revisions to the Anti-Trafficking in Persons (Prohibition) Act of 2013 and the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Prohibition) Act of 2013, with the aim of achieving compliance with international standards. On March 24, 2022, the government enacted into law an amendment to the Indictable Procedures Act that adds the crimes of child abduction, child abuse, and human trafficking to the list of crimes that can be tried without a jury in order to improve the speed of court cases, address the back log of cases, and provide survivors a more comfortable environment in which to testify. (31)

Research could not determine whether laws prohibit the use of children in specific illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs. (32)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Human Development, Families, and Indigenous People's Affairs	Receives referrals for child labor cases. (16) Provides survivors with welfare services, including medical and social services and counseling assistance. (18) Previously known as Ministry of Human Development and Social Transformation, Department of Human Services. Department of Human Services and Child Protection remains under this ministry and is tasked with enforcement of criminal laws regarding forced child labor, child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, the recruitment and use of child soldiers, and use of children in illicit activities. (16)
Belize Police Department (BPD)	Investigates cases of child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and human trafficking through Sexual Offense and Family Violence Units. (2,3,16) Through its Anti-Trafficking in Persons (A-TIP) Unit, utilizes specialized screening to identify potential survivors of trafficking and forced labor. The A-TIP Unit works closely with its counterparts in the A-TIP Council, which is the interagency governmental council overseeing cases involving trafficking and forced labor. (16)
Office of the Director of Public Prosecution	Prosecutes criminal offenses in court, including cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking. (3,11)

Organization/Agency	Role
Child Labor Secretariat and Inspectorate	Identifies, coordinates, and reports on all child labor activities; collaborates with stakeholders to assist with the monitoring and enforcement of laws and policies that relate to child labor; and consults, educates, and raises awareness of child labor. Deals with all issues related to child labor and enables criminal authorities and social services to reciprocally refer children found in child labor. (2) After the situation has been assessed, relevant agencies get involved, such as the Department of Human Services and BPD. (16)
Ministry of Rural Transformation, Community Development, Labor, and Local Government	Identifies cases, conducts inspections, and enforces laws related to child labor and hazardous child labor through its Labor Department. (3,16) In June 2021, held a day-long workshop on child labor issues to observe World Day Against Child Labor. (33)
Ministry of Education, Culture, Science, and Technology	Investigates truancy offenses in schools and issues fines for these violations. (2,3)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Belize took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including insufficient funding for the labor inspectorate.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

The government incorporates child labor curriculum into inspector training programs and uses a child labor inspection and monitoring form that it developed through the CLEAR II Project to record child labor information. Of the 584 labor inspections performed during the reporting year, 197 were child labor inspections. (16) Although the Labor Department is required to visit every business at least once a year, it usually falls short of this goal due to a lack of resources. (1,10) Labor inspectors are able to assess penalties, but the fine for child labor infractions is only $12.50. Liquor licensing boards, which also have a responsibility to detect and report cases of child labor, also routinely fails to conduct required inspections of restaurants and bars. (1,34,35) Thus, inspections and penalties may be insufficient to deter child labor violations in Belize.

The government does not publish information regarding labor inspectorate funding. Government officials indicated that inspectors have sufficient office facilities, transportation, fuel, and other necessities to carry out inspections. (16) However, according to the Child Development Foundation, a local NGO that works in the field of child exploitation, abuse, neglect, and labor, the annual budget designated to address child labor is insufficient. The Child Development Foundation also noted that, in most instances, labor inspectors do not have transportation and fuel to travel to all locations. (16) Another NGO contact confirmed that inspectors do not travel to all areas of the country due to vehicle and fuel shortages, which prevents the proper monitoring of child labor across industries. During the reporting year, while labor inspections continued, the COVID-19 pandemic prevented inspectors from traveling on occasion. (16)

Child labor complaints can be submitted to the Labor Department, the Belize Police Department, or the Department of Human Services. Limited reporting from local NGOs and the private sector indicates that it is difficult to follow up on the status of complaints made. (1,3)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Belize took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including insufficient training for criminal investigators.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	N/A (3)	No (16)

The government did not provide information on trainings for inclusion in this report, however, several trainings were attended by officers from the Anti-Trafficking in Persons (A-TIP) Police Unit and other ministries throughout the reporting period. These included a training by the International Center for Missing & Exploited Children on concepts, definitions and legal foundations on child sexual abuse and exploitation for one officer from the Department of Human Services (DHS), as well as trainings held by UNODC on cyber-enabled crimes against children and women for a total of 23 officers from A-TIP, the Ministry of Human Development, Belize Police Department, and the National Committee for Families and Children. (31) In addition, Interpol trained an A-TIP police officer on trafficking in persons and online child pornography investigation. (31)

The government did not provide information on how many investigations of child labor were conducted during the reporting period. (16)

There have been four human trafficking convictions since 2005. This includes the conviction of one trafficker in 2019 for sex and labor trafficking, and two traffickers, including the mother of the victim, for commercial sexual exploitation of children as a result of human trafficking in 2021. (35-37) The 2021 cases are the first convictions made under Belize's Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children Act. Although the country's laws allow for the imprisonment of violators, human trafficking cases are often dismissed by lower courts and there are generally low rates of victim identification and prosecution of traffickers. (36,38) Additionally, there are anecdotal but consistent reports of low-level officials tolerating and participating in human trafficking-related offences; however, research has not found frequent occurrences of high-level complicity in human trafficking cases. (14,31,34,38,39)

Belize lacks official statistics on commercial sexual exploitation of children, and criminal investigators, police officers, and labor inspectors lack sufficient resources—such as vehicles, fuel, office supplies, and adequate training—to investigate violations of criminal law, including the worst forms of child labor. (2,12)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including efficacy in accomplishing mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Child Labor Committee	Coordinates efforts among ministries to prevent and eliminate child labor and implement the National Child Labor Policy. Led by the Ministry of Rural Transformation, Community Development, Labor, and Local Government and 14 government and civil society members. (40,41) The Child Labor Secretariat and Inspectorate serves as the Secretary for the Committee. (2) The Committee distinguishes between children engaged in work that is beneficial to their development and those engaged in the worst forms of child labor. (37,42) During the reporting period, resumed meetings with newly appointed representatives from various government agencies and stakeholders. (43) Five meetings were held throughout 2021. (16)
Anti-Trafficking in Persons Council	Identifies and rescues human trafficking survivors, trains law enforcement officials, and educates the public about the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Led by the Chief Executive Officer of the Ministry of Human Development; includes 12 other government agencies and civil society organizations. (44) During the reporting period, held an anti-trafficking in persons symposium in partnership with the Human Trafficking Institute during which stakeholders renewed their commitment to strengthening their network and discussed how they can improve efforts to address human trafficking. (45)
National Committee for Families and Children	Promotes, monitors, and evaluates Belize's compliance with its national and international commitments to children, including the UN CRC. (46) Implements the National Results Framework for Children and Adolescents 2017–2030, which is also referred to as the Children's Agenda. Collaborates with the Child Labor Secretariat and Inspectorate on special assignments and projects. (3,8,47,48) Research could not determine whether activities were held during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including a lack of implementation.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Child Labor Policy†	Focuses on strengthening child labor laws, creating legislation to address existing gaps, and providing educational assistance to children who have been or who are currently engaged in child labor. (49) Aims to strengthen government institutions and services and to train labor officers. (41) In collaboration with the ILO and UNICEF, developed the country's second national child labor policy during the reporting year with plans to finalize and begin implementation in 2022. (16,50,51) In 2021, hosted a dedicated online workshop which brought together tripartite ILO constituents and broad representation from governmental and non-governmental entities. (50,52)
CARE Model	Coordinates the protection, care, and monitoring of sexually exploited and trafficked children. Outlines the role of the Department of Human Services and BPD in receiving allegations of commercial sexual exploitation of children and referring children to services. (2) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the CARE Model during the reporting period.
National Results Framework for Children and Adolescents (Children's Agenda) 2017–2030	Sets out the government's agenda and priorities to protect the rights of children and adolescents, including in education, health, economic security and opportunity, and protection from discrimination, abuse, and exploitation, including child labor. (8,47,48) Raises awareness of the role of families in promoting early childhood education. (48) Research was unable to determine what activities took place to implement the National Results Framework for Children and Adolescents during the reporting period.
Road Map to End Child Marriage and Early Unions in Belize	Increases awareness of commercial sexual exploitation legislation, particularly to protect children between the ages of 15 and 17 from exploitation. Coordinated by the National Committee for Families and Children, in partnership with UNICEF. (49,50,53,54) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the Road Map to End Child Marriage and Early Unions in Belize during the reporting period. (16)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Building Opportunities for Our Social Transformation	Conditional cash transfer program established in 2010 with approximately 3,116 households benefitting annually. (55) Continues to be implemented in Belize City in areas with the highest reported incidents of child sexual exploitation. (2) Provides small cash assistance to poor households subject to specific conditions, such as minimum school attendance of 85 percent. The program seeks to prevent the commercial sexual exploitation of children by wealthy men who pay families for access to vulnerable children. (2) Received additional funding for 6 months under the BCCAT pandemic relief program. (56) Research could not determine whether activities were held within the reporting period.
Social Innovative LABOR Project*	Belize Labor Department, ILO, and the Belize Sugarcane Farmers Association program that pilots strategies to promote employment for vulnerable youth and women in the sugarcane supply chain in northern Belize. (16,57) The project had a budget of $25,000 and took place between May 12, 2021 to February 12, 2022. (16) During the reporting period, a desk study was conducted to determine implementation activities for the next phase of the project, which is expected to begin in 2022. (58)
Belize COVID-19 Cash Transfer Program (BCCAT)*	$12.4 million cash transfer program funded by the World Bank and implemented by the Ministry of Human Development, Social Transformation and Poverty Alleviation, the National Bank of Belize Limited, Digi, and the Belize Social Investment Fund to assist 10,500 poor and vulnerable families during the pandemic. (59)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (60)

During the reporting period, the A-TIP Council, with funding from IOM, held informational sessions on human trafficking with 30 high school teachers and 15 Red Cross volunteers of San Ignacio Town. The National Organization for the Prevention of Child Abuse and Neglect, UNICEF, and the NGO Pathlight also trained 555 primary school and high school teachers on Mandatory Reporting Training. (31) In addition, Youth Enhancement Services trained 44 officers from the Community Rehabilitation Department, Residential Care Facilities, DHS, and the Women's Department on commercial sexual exploitation of children, trafficking in persons (prohibition), and domestic violence legislation. (31)

Research found no evidence of government programs to prevent or eliminate commercial sexual exploitation of children or to assist children working in agriculture, fisheries, or construction. (3) However, the government sponsored billboards at the international airport and at border crossing points specifically to address child sex tourism. The government further participated in a multicountry program to identify and deny tourist entry to registered sex offenders. (61)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

In 2021, Benin made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Social Affairs removed 400 children from child labor as a result of social services inspections. In addition, the Administrative Census for Population Identification registered citizens without identity documents, and the Government of Benin streamlined processes for birth registration. However, children in Benin are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in the production of cotton and crushed granite, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in domestic work and street vending. There are many barriers to education, especially for children with disabilities. In addition, the government did not publicly release information on some of its criminal law enforcement efforts, and limited resources for the adequate enforcement of child labor laws may impede government efforts to protect children from the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Benin are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in the production of cotton and crushed granite, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in domestic work and street vending. (I-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Benin. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	24.7 (Unavailable)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	67.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	16.8
Primary Completion Rate (%)		62.4

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey (DHS), 2017–2018. (9)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Forced labor in granite quarrying, domestic work, vending, handicraft activities, fishing, and agriculture, including in the production of cotton (1-4,6,7,12,14,16,18,22)

	Forced begging (2)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and use in the production of pornography (1-3,7,23)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Child trafficking occurs mostly within Benin but it also occurs to other countries, primarily Gabon, Togo, Nigeria, and the Republic of the Congo, for purposes of domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, and work in vending, agriculture, and mining. (1,2,7,24) Children living in the northern regions of Benin are particularly vulnerable to human trafficking to urban regions in southern Benin. (1) Reports also indicate that children living in the lakeside areas of southeastern Benin, including the commune of So Ava, are sometimes subjected to debt bondage. (2) Children work below the minimum age in the production of cotton, Benin's top export crop, and they are sometimes exposed to dangerous pesticides. (2) Furthermore, children are subjected to hazardous labor, and at times forced labor, in granite quarrying. (6) Traditionally, under a practice known locally as vidomègon, children live with relatives or family friends and perform household services in exchange for educational opportunities. A majority of these children are girls, and many are subjected to labor exploitation and sexual abuse. (7,10,14,25)

In Benin, primary education is free and compulsory for all children between ages 6 and 11, and secondary education is free for girls through grade nine. (26) While boys and girls attend primary school at roughly the same rates, gaps persist between boys and girls in terms of access to, and completion of secondary school. (27-29) Evidence suggests that incidences of abuse in school, including corporal punishment (outlawed in 2015), sexual harassment, and sexual abuse by teachers in exchange for better grades, continue to hamper educational access, especially for girls. (2,3,23) In December 2021, Benin imposed more severe penalties for sexual harassment and sexual abuse by teachers when it passed a law putting the two crimes under the national Court for the Repression of Economic Crimes and Terrorism. (24) Inadequate toilets and sanitation facilities, as well as lack of access to menstruation education and products, are further barriers to girls' education. (3,24,27) In Benin, other barriers to education include the need to travel long distances, insufficient quantity of school staff, and inadequate access for students with disabilities. (2,25,30,31) To address the latter, the government runs 20 specialty schools in the country. (2) In rural areas, sometimes children do not have birth certificates due to the costs and parents' limited understanding of birth registration procedures. Since birth certificates are required for school enrollment, children without documentation may be denied access to education. (2,23,26)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Benin has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 166 and 301 of the Labor Code; Article 210 of the Child Code (32,33)

Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 2–4, 6, 15–16, 18, and 21–25 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors; Articles 201, 212, 352, and 353 of the Child Code; Articles 499–501 and 504 of the Penal Code (32,33,35,36)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 3 of the Law on the Prevention and Repression of Violence Against Women; Article 4 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors; Articles 212 and 378 of the Child Code; Article 504 of the Penal Code (33,35–37)

Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 6 of Law 2005-43 (38)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	Yes		Article 6 of Law 2005-43; Title II, Article 32 of the Constitution (38,39)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Articles 2 and 4 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors (35)
Compulsory Education Age	No	11‡	Article 24 of Act No 2003-17; Article 113 of the Child Code (33,37,40)
Free Public Education	No		Article 13 of the Constitution; Article 114 of the Child Code; Article 24 of Act No 2003-17 (33,39,40)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (26,40)

Children in Benin are required to attend primary school, which lasts 6 years and typically ends at age 11. This standard makes children ages 12 through 14 vulnerable to child labor as they are not required to attend school but are not legally permitted to work. (32,33,40) As the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. (10,32,33,37,40,41) In addition, while the law provides free primary education to all children, basic education through the lower secondary level is not guaranteed by law, which may increase the risk of children's vulnerability to child labor. (33,39,40)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Civil Service (MOLCS)	Enforces child labor laws and investigates labor code infractions. (2,20,42) Refers child laborers found during inspections to social services and to shelters run by the government or non-governmental organizations. (2) Coordinates the National Executive Committee to Combat Child Labor ( Comité Directeur National de Lutte Contre le Travail des Enfants (CDN)). (2)
Ministry of the Interior and Public Security	Enforces criminal laws related to the protection of minors, including the worst forms of child labor, through the Central Office for the Protection of Minors, Families, and the Prevention of Human Trafficking (OCPM). (1,3) Maintains a child trafficking database—Benin's Children ( Enfants du Benin )—to track and process child trafficking cases. (1) Coordinates with MOLCS to inspect labor code infractions related to child labor, and coordinates with the Ministry of Social Affairs and Microfinance to provide assistance to victims of labor exploitation. (3) The government allocated a budget of approximately $118,000 to the OCPM in 2021. (2) Through OCPM's vice squad ( Brigade des Moeurs ), addresses human trafficking for sexual exploitation. (2,3)
Beninese Human Rights Commission	Independent government institution empowered to receive complaints related to human rights violations, investigate them, and issue administrative instructions to other state agencies to remedy the violation or enforce the law. In 2021, received and investigated several child labor complaints. (2)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Benin took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor and Civil Service (MOLCS) that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including restrictions on inspections in agriculture.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2020	2021

Unannounced Inspections Conducted	Yes (3)	Yes (2)
Complaint Mechanism Exists	Yes (3)	Yes (2)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	Yes (3)	Yes (2)

Labor inspections are conducted via committee and require the presence of labor inspectors, police officers, and social workers. In practice, research suggests that these requirements create logistical challenges to the labor inspection process. (2) MOLCS estimated that its budget allocation only met 10 percent of its needs, and the labor inspectorate lacked sufficient transportation to conduct regular inspections. (2) The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Benin's workforce, which includes over 3.8 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Benin would need to employ about 92 inspectors. (43,44)

The government prioritized labor inspections of apprenticeship arrangements, including in construction, carpentry, cosmetology, and metalworking. (13) Resource constraints prevented sufficient inspections in quarries, in which an estimated 70 percent of workers are children. With UNICEF support, however, the government conducted inspections at quarries in 3 out of 12 departments. (2,13) MOLCS claims that it is not permitted to conduct labor inspections in agriculture due to the lack of an interministerial decree from the Ministry of Agriculture. The labor code, by contrast, allows labor inspectors to freely enter any workplace to carry out investigations, and it requires all civil authorities to collaborate with labor officials to facilitate inspections. (2,13,19) This gap between law and practice means that no inspections are carried out in agriculture, a sector in which child labor is known to be present. (2,13,19)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Benin took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including insufficient training for criminal investigators.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	No (3)	Yes (2)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A (3)	No (2)
Refresher Courses Provided	No (3)	Yes (45)
Number of Investigations	Unknown (3)	Unknown (2)
Number of Violations Found	Unknown (3)	Unknown (2)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown (3)	Unknown (2)
Number of Convictions	Unknown (3)	Unknown (2)
Imposed Penalties for Violations Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	No (3)	Unknown (2)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (3)	Yes (2)

The government has a mechanism to enable criminal authorities and social services to reciprocally refer children found in the worst forms of child labor and human trafficking, and social workers regularly refer cases. (2) The government also runs a child assistance hotline, which takes anonymous tips and is staffed 24 hours a day by French and local language speakers. Tips involving child trafficking and child labor are referred to social services and criminal authorities. (1,3) Criminal law enforcement officers received initial training on child labor and child trafficking as part of the National Police Academy's curriculum, but the government and UNICEF have assessed the training as insufficient. (2) The government does not maintain a centralized criminal records database. As a result, it did not provide complete information on its criminal law enforcement efforts, including the number of investigations, violations found, prosecutions initiated, convictions, or penalties imposed for inclusion in this report. (2,24) In addition, courts often prosecute criminal cases related to labor under charges of child abuse or illegal movement of children. (24)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including lack of coordination among agencies.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Executive Committee to Combat Child Labor ( Comité Directeur National de Lutte contre le Travail des Enfants, CDN )	Coordinates efforts to address child labor. Falls under the jurisdiction of MOLCS and includes delegates from the ILO, UNICEF, trade unions, local NGOs, and other government ministries. (2,3) Met during the reporting period. (19)
National Monitoring and Coordination Working Group for Child Protection	Established by decree in 2006 and chaired by the Ministry of Social Affairs and Microfinance's Secretary-General. Comprises 40 member organizations, including international NGOs, civil society groups, and government ministries. (3) Includes five technical committees: (1) trafficking and exploitation, (2) juvenile justice, (3) violence against children, (4) orphans and vulnerable children, and (5) early childhood. (3) Met twice during the reporting period to review child protection efforts, including initiatives to address child labor. (2)
Interministerial Task Force to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Coordinates government efforts to address trafficking in persons through five committees: (1) prosecution, (2) prevention and protection, (3) statistics, (4) intellectual, and (5) policy. Led by the Ministry of Planning and Development and includes representatives of other key ministries and NGOs. (3,46,47) In 2021, convened for the first time since 2019, and met on an ad-hoc basis to compile and review trafficking in persons-related data. (2,45)
Ministry of Social Affairs and Microfinance	Works on committees with labor inspectors from MOLCS to conduct labor inspections at worksites. (2) Refers cases of child labor to criminal law enforcement. (2) Provides social assistance and social support services to vulnerable populations and is the lead agency for child protection in Benin. (3,42) Manages a Child Assistance hotline ( Ligne d'Assistance aux Enfants ) with support from UNICEF. (2,19) Operates 85 Social Promotion Centers (CPS) across the country, which provide social services to vulnerable citizens, including survivors of human trafficking and labor exploitation. CPSs also operate a referral mechanism for child labor with the local police, OCPM, and MOLCS. (11,22,45,48) Through the Family and Child Monitoring Office, maintains Child Pro, a database for child trafficking statistics. (1,22) In 2021, the Ministry of Social Affairs removed 400 children from child labor as a result of social services inspections, and it removed a separate 550 child trafficking survivors from the worst forms of child labor. (2)

Research found that there is a lack of effective coordination among agencies responsible for addressing the needs of vulnerable children, partially due to a lack of clarity regarding institutional mandates and gaps in communication regarding child labor data. (2,3,10)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including insufficient incorporation of child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Education Sector Plan.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2019–2023)	Aims to reduce the worst forms of child labor in Benin by 70 percent by the end of 2023. Targets six focus areas: (1) strengthening the legislative and institutional framework related to child labor; (2) information, awareness, and social mobilization; (3) education and training; (4) victim monitoring, protection, and referral; (5) inspection and suppression; and (6) institutional mechanisms, and monitoring and evaluation of the plan. (3,49) Includes a vocational education program focused on formalizing and regulating apprenticeships for children. (24) In 2021, as part of this action plan, the Minister of Labor and Civil Service undertook additional inspections of apprenticeship arrangements and granted awards to apprenticeship masters who complied with child labor laws. (2,19)
Cooperative Agreement to Combat Cross-Border Trafficking	Aims to protect migrant children and survivors of transborder human trafficking. A tripartite cooperative agreement among the Governments of Benin, Burkina Faso, and Togo committing to cooperate and assist each other in the investigation of human trafficking offenses. (10) During the reporting period, Benin and Togo cooperated in investigating several trafficking cases. (19)
National Action Plan to Fight Trafficking in Persons (2020–2024)	Aims to eradicate human trafficking in Benin by strengthening governmental systems and institutional framework. (1,50) In 2021, as part of this policy, the Ministry of Social Affairs and Microfinance continued the implementation of SIDoFFE-New Generation, which allows Benin's 85 CPSs to input data relating to child protection, including child labor and child trafficking. (45)

The government indicates that inadequate resources were dedicated to the National Action Plan to Fight Trafficking in Persons. (19) In addition, the Education Sector Plan does not incorporate child labor elimination and prevention strategies. (51)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Government-Funded Shelters†	OCPM operates an interim care facility for children rescued from child trafficking or labor exploitation. The center, which has capacity for 160 children, provides housing and medical, legal, and psychological services. (1,2) After cases are processed, children are typically reunited with their families, placed with foster families, or relocated to long-term shelters. During the reporting period, the government granted or reissued permits to 72 child protection intake centers. (2)
Government-Funded Retraining Centers†	Vocational school program to train survivors of child trafficking in a trade, maintained by MOLCS, with the assistance from UNICEF. (52) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken as part of this program during the reporting year.
Integrated National School Feeding Program (2017–2021)†	$87 million Government of Benin-funded program managed by the World Food Program. The project aimed to improve school retention and reduce child hunger by implementing feeding programs at 3,851 schools. (29,53) The program ended in December 2021. (29)
McGovern-Dole International Food for Education and Child Nutrition Program (2019–2023)	U.S. Department of Agriculture-funded project implemented by Catholic Relief Services in the Alibori and Borgou regions. Aims to improve the literacy and attendance of school-age children, improve the health and dietary practices of students, and increase government capacity of and investment in school meal programs. (54) In 2021, the Government of Benin continued to fund a portion of this project. (2)
Administrative Census for Population Identification †	Government of Benin-funded program to identify and register citizens lacking identity documents. As part of the Administrative Census, the government also standardized birth registration fees and created a new digital database with an online birth certificate application option that guarantees delivery of birth certificates within 30 days. (2) This program continued in 2021. (2)

† Program is funded by the Government of Benin.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (2,20,55-57)

During the reporting period, the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic reduced the capacity of the Central Office for the Protection of Minors, Families, and the Prevention of Human Trafficking shelters. Logistical challenges in testing, isolating, and quarantining survivors of human trafficking also affected shelters. (19) Although the Government of Benin has implemented programs to protect children from human trafficking, research was unable to determine whether the government implements programs to assist children engaged in other worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, and work in agriculture. (2,46)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Benin (Table 11).

	Ensure that the age up to which education is compulsory is the same as the minimum age for work.	2021
Enforcement	Provide initial training, training on new laws, and refresher courses on child labor for labor inspectors and provide training on new laws for criminal law enforcement officials.	2013 – 2021
	Publish data on labor law enforcement efforts, including penalties imposed and collected.	2021
	Increase financial resources to enforce laws against child labor.	2009 – 2021
	Improve interministerial coordination in the planning and completion of labor inspections.	2021

In 2021, Bhutan made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The National Commission for Women and Children developed a Standard Operating Procedure for children in difficult circumstances. The commission also launched a mobile application that allows people to report violations against women and children, including child labor violations, and connects citizens to the national helpline. However, children in Bhutan are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation, as a result of trafficking and forced domestic work and care-giving. Bhutan's minimum age for work is inconsistent with international standards, and education is not compulsory. The government has not adopted a national policy to address child labor, including its worst forms. The government did not publicly release information on its criminal law enforcement efforts.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bhutan are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and care giving. (1,2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Bhutan.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	3.8 (6,338)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	84.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	3.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		82.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2020, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2021. (3)

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4 (MICS 4), 2010. (4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, activities unknown (5)
Industry	Construction,† activities unknown (6-8)
Services	Domestic work (2,5)
	Work in hospitality services, including restaurants (2,5)
	Work in automobile workshops (2)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, as a result of human trafficking (2)
	Forced domestic work, including forced care-giving (2,5)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

There is a lack of current data on child labor in Bhutan. To date, no national survey on child labor has been conducted. Bhutanese girls are victims of sex and labor trafficking, including forced domestic work and caregiving. (2) Some are trafficked through debt bondage and threats of physical abuse. Media outlets have reported instances of child labor in Bhutan's restaurants and automobile workshop industries, with some indications of forced child labor. Some Indian children are trafficked into Bhutan for the purpose of domestic servitude. (2,9)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The government provides free education to all Bhutanese citizens until grade 10. (10) While the Royal Government of Bhutan has committed to achieving universal student attendance in its 12th five-year plan, research was unable to determine whether the plan has been implemented. (10,11) Children living in remote villages, children from nomadic communities or migrant populations, and children with disabilities face significant difficulties in accessing public schools, including long distances to school and lack of transportation. (1,2,11,12) Although they have access to primary education, a small number of children who are stateless lack access to the documentation necessary to enroll in higher education, making them more vulnerable to child labor and trafficking. (2,5,13)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Bhutan has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3). Bhutan is not a member of the ILO.

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	N/A
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Bhutan's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the minimum age for work.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	13	Sections 170–171 of the Labour and Employment Act; Regulation on Working Conditions 2012: Acceptable Forms of Child Labor (14,15)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Sections 170–171 of the Labour and Employment Act (14)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Section 9(e) of the Labour and Employment Act; Section 9 of the Regulation on Acceptable Forms of Child Labor (14,15)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	No		Amendment 9 of Penal Code (Amendment) Act of Bhutan 2021; Section 11 of Acceptable Forms of Child Labour, 2009; Sections 6–8, 9(a), and 10 of the Labor and Employment Act; Sections 154–155 of the Penal Code; Preamble, and Sections 221 and 224 of the Child Care and Protection Act (15-16)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	No		Section 9(a) of the Labour and Employment Act; Sections 221 and 224 of the Child Care and Protection Act; Amendment 9 of Penal Code (Amendment) Act of Bhutan 2021; Sections 154 and 379–380 of the Penal Code (14,16-18,19)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Section 9(b) of the Labour and Employment Act; Sections 222–224 of the Child Care and Protection Act; Sections 225 and 375–380 of the Penal Code (14,17,18)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Section 9(c) of the Labour and Employment Act; Sections 216 and 220 of the Child Care and Protection Act (14,17)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Defense Service Rules and Regulations (20)

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	N/A*
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Section 9(a) of the Labor and Employment Act (14)
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 9.16 of the Constitution of the Kingdom of Bhutan (21)

* Country has no conscription (20)

Bhutan's minimum age for work is not compliant with international standards because the Labour and Employment Act allows children under age 14 to work. (14) Although Bhutan provides free education through grade 10, attendance is not compulsory, which may increase the risk of children's involvement in child labor. (2,10) Laws prohibiting forced labor are not sufficient as they do not criminalize slavery. (15-17) While there is no explicit prohibition on slavery, Bhutan does criminalize practices similar to slavery such as sale of children, debt bondage, and forced labor. (14,18) While the Bhutanese Parliament passed the Penal Code (Amendment) Act of Bhutan 2021, which amended the legal definition of human trafficking to make the legislation consistent with international standards for adults, it still includes the necessity of force, fraud, or coercion in child trafficking cases. (5,16,19,22)

Although the Royal Government of Bhutan reports that the minimum age for voluntary recruitment into Bhutan's military is 18, the relevant Defense Service Rules and Regulations were not available for public review. (20,22)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Human Resources	Investigates child labor complaints and ensures that employers comply with child labor laws. Refers cases involving the worst forms of child labor to the police. (5,10) Regularly inspects companies for compliance with the Labour and Employment Act. Regulations on working conditions cover issues related to child labor; wages, worker compensation, the recruitment process for foreign workers, grievance procedures, penalties, and hours of work. (23)
Royal Bhutan Police	Investigates and enforces criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor. Includes 3 dedicated Women and Child Protection Units and 10 Women and Child Protection Desks tasked with enforcing laws protecting women and children. (5,24) Refers survivors of child abuse and exploitation to child welfare officers and the National Commission for Women and Children. (5,18)
Child Justice Court	Adjudicates criminal and civil cases involving child labor. (5,18)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Bhutan took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor and Human Resources that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including insufficient financial and human resource allocation.

† Data from July 2020–June 2021.

Ministry of Labor and Human Resources officials acknowledged that limited financial and human resources place constraints on the number of inspections conducted and inspectors employed. (1) Inspectors lack adequate training regarding human-trafficking and refresher courses were not provided due to budget issues. (2,10) Labor inspectors cannot carry out inspections in private farms or homes. In some cases, exceptions are made if underage child labor is suspected. (5) While the government allocated approximately $180,360 towards the labor inspectorate, only $5,000 was targeted towards operational support for child labor inspections. (10)

In 2021, the COVID-19 pandemic hampered government efforts to conduct the required number of labor inspections. Additionally, pandemic-related budget cuts exacerbated logistical and equipment challenges already faced by labor inspectors. (10) While the Royal Government of Bhutan reports that there was sufficient training for labor inspectors in 2021, one Bhutanese Government official has acknowledged that additional training beyond the initial training may be needed. (5,10)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Bhutan took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including a lack of data on criminal law enforcement efforts.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In January 2022, a 77-year-old Bhutanese woman was charged with trafficking a non-Bhutanese 13-year-old girl, which was brought to national attention after the trafficked girl died by suicide. (9,26) The child was allegedly trafficked to Bhutan from India around 7 years ago to work as a maid. Bhutan police have indicated that further investigation is outstanding but indicate that the accused will be charged within relevant laws against child labor and trafficking. (26) The government does not publicly release information on criminal law enforcement efforts. (5,10)

The Government of Bhutan, upon the order of the Prime Minister, officially closed the karaoke bars in 2022 to stop worker exploitation. (27) Reports had previously indicated that girls who worked as entertainers in karaoke bars and were vulnerable to trafficking for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation. (2)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including a lack of efficacy in accomplishing mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Child Labor Task Force	Coordinates government efforts on child labor across multiple government agencies and ministries. Led by the Ministry of Labor and Human Resources, and comprises representatives from government, international organizations, civil society, and the private sector. (28,29) Research was unable to determine whether the Child Labor Task Force was active during the reporting period.
National Commission for Women and Children (NCWC)	Coordinates the implementation of laws and policies that promote and protect the rights of women and children. Comprised of a chairperson at the cabinet level and high-level officials who represent relevant government agencies, NGOs, and the private sector. (30) During the reporting period, NCWC, along with UNICEF and Save the Children, developed a standard operating procedure for children in difficult circumstances, including child labor and the worst forms of child labor. (31,32)
Trafficking in Persons Special Task Force	Coordinates anti-trafficking in persons efforts, including monitoring human trafficking trends in Bhutan and advising national policy on human trafficking. Headed by the Department of Law and Order, with participation from other relevant government agencies and civil society organizations. (1) Research was unable to determine if the TIP task force met during the reporting period.

Budget cuts have hampered the National Commission for Women and Children (NCWC) from effectively implementing its programs for women and children, including providing shelter homes for children. Bhutanese officials have commented on a lack of protection, probation, and NCWC child welfare officers due to the budget cuts. (33) Due to the pandemic response and national lockdowns, many government officials were reassigned to pandemic response duties. Many government offices were closed, although essential services were still provided. (10)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the government has established policies to address child labor. (10)

The government has not adopted a national strategy to address child labor, including hazardous work. (1)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 9). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of programs to address the problem in all sectors.

Bhutan

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 9. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Women and Children Hotlines†	Respond to issues related to women and children, including human trafficking cases and provide emergency assistance and referral services. (23) One hotline is run through NCWC and is managed by a team of counselors, providing counseling and legal services. MOLHR also has a hotline that can receive anonymous complaints about child labor abuses. MOLHR's online system is for employers and employees to report complaints and accidents. (24) During the reporting period, the NCWC launched a mobile application to provide additional access to existing services for women and children in need. The application allows people to report potential rights violations involving women or children. Members of the public also can access this hotline by calling 1098. (31)
Shelters for Vulnerable Women and Children†	Include Project Hope, an NCWC program that provides residential shelters for children at risk of labor exploitation. (1) In 2019, the program was transferred to Respect, Educate, Nurture, and Empower Women (RENEW) as part of its shelter program. RENEW is a Thimphu-based NGO that receives government funding, and provides shelter, counseling, and rehabilitation for women and children who have been victims of human trafficking. (1) The Nazhoen Lamtoen Children Halfway Home also provides shelter, counseling, and support services to children, in part through government funding. (25,34) During the reporting period, supported educational expenses for 18 children currently under NCWC's care as part of the shelter case management process. (31)
Promoting Rights-Based Multi-Sectoral Responses to Prevent Trafficking in Persons in Bhutan (2019–2022)	Program funded by the USDOS Trafficking in Persons Office and implemented by UNODC to improve Bhutanese police investigation skills regarding human trafficking cases, improve information sharing, and implement the government's standard operating procedure for Multi-Sectoral Responses to Prevent Trafficking in Persons in Bhutan. (1) During the reporting period, the UNODC, in collaboration with the Bhutanese government conducted anti-trafficking training to more than 255 students and educators in Thimphu. (35)

† Program is funded by the Royal Government of Bhutan.

Although Bhutan has programs that target children labor, research found that the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem in all relevant sectors, particularly regarding child labor in agriculture, domestic work, and the worst forms of child labor.

According to the 12th Five-Year Plan (2018–2023), the government has included achieving universal student attendance and improving education outcome for primary students by 2023. (10,11) The government has not adopted a national strategy to address child labor, including hazardous work. (1)

In 2021, Bolivia made minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government passed a decree giving migrants the ability to normalize their status without paying fines, helping enroll more children in school. However, children in Bolivia are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and mining. Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture, including in the production and harvesting of Brazil nuts. Although Bolivian law requires that apprentices attend school, it does not set a minimum age for participation in apprenticeships. In addition, Article 1 of Supreme Decree No. 1875 sets the minimum age for compulsory military service at 17, which does not comply with international standards. The government also did not publicly release information on its criminal law enforcement efforts.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bolivia are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and mining. Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture including in the production and harvesting of Brazil nuts. (1) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Bolivia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	7 to 14	15.4 (286,890)
Attending School (%)	7 to 14	97.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	14.5
Primary Completion Rate (%)		91.6

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Planting and harvesting corn and peanuts (4)
	Harvesting and processing of Brazil nuts/chestnuts† and sugarcane† (1,4)
	Ranching and raising cattle† and plucking chickens (5-8)
Industry	Mining† of gold, silver, tin, and zinc (1,6,9,10)
	Construction,† including heavy lifting and shoveling (1)
	Production of bricks† (1)
Services	Street vending, juggling, shoe shining, and assisting transportation operators (6,7,11,12)
	Cleaning cemeteries (grave sites) (9,11-13)
	Domestic work (1)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor in domestic work, mining, ranching, and in the production and harvesting of Brazil nuts and sugarcane (14,15)
	Forced begging (1,15)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1,15)
	Use in illicit activities, including robbery and producing or transporting drugs (1,15)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Indigenous children are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. (14) The cultural practice known as padrinazgo, which involves rural families sending their children to urban areas to live with individuals for better access to education, social services, and food, often leads to forced labor, including in domestic work and third-party businesses. (14) Girls, on average age 14, were found to be engaged in commercial sexual exploitation, including sex trafficking, in El Alto. (1) Research indicates that the commercial sexual exploitation of Bolivian children thrives due to the strength of the legal sex industry in Bolivia, the persistence of poverty, cultural norms that contribute to the denigration of women and girls, and the demand for child sex tourism. (1,6) Bolivian children are also subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, including sex trafficking, and forced labor both within the country and abroad. (1,15) Research found that young women and girls ages 13 to 17 were increasingly being targeted for human trafficking through cyber recruitment. (16)

Attendance rates for secondary education remain low in rural areas. (7) Following the 2020 complete closure of schools due to the COVID-19 pandemic, classes resumed in February 2021 on a hybrid schedule of in-person classes, blended learning classes, and distance learning facilitated with tele-education, radio education, and the use of digital platforms. The Ministry of Education gradually shifted to nearly full-time in-person attendance following continuous health evaluations of each region. (1) In 2021, civil society reported a steady rise in the number of Venezuelan migrants electing to stay in Bolivia, most of whom lacked legal status. The children of these families often struggled to obtain the proper paperwork to enroll in the public school system. (1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Bolivia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Articles 8 and 58 of the General Labor Law; Article 129 of the Child and Adolescent Code; Sentence 0025/2017 of the Plurinational Constitutional Tribunal; Article 3 of Law No. 1139 (17-20)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 58–59 of the General Labor Law; Articles 5 and 136 of the Child and Adolescent Code (17,18)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Article 136 of the Child and Adolescent Code (18)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 15, 46, and 61 of the Constitution; Article 291 of the Penal Code; Article 34 of the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling (21-23)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	No		Article 15 of the Constitution; Articles 6, 34, and 35 of the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling (21,23)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 34 and 35 of the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling; Articles 281 bis, 32, 321 bis, 322, and 323 bis of the Penal Code (23,24)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 47, 48, and 56 of the Law on Coca and Controlled Substances (25)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	16*	Article 2 of the General Directive of Pre-Military Recruitment; Articles 2 and 7 of the Law of National Military Service (26,27)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	No		Articles 108 and 249 of the Constitution; Article 1 of Supreme Decree No. 1875; Article 1 of Supreme Decree No. 21479 (21,28,29)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	17‡	Article 81 of the Constitution; Articles 1, 8–9, and 11–14 of the Avelino Siñani-Elizardo Pérez Education Law (21,30)
Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 17 and 81 of the Constitution; Article 1 of the Avelino Siñani-Elizardo Pérez Education Law; Article 115 of the Child and Adolescent Code (18,21,30)

*The minimum age for combat is 18 per Article 36 of the Law of National Military Service. (26)

‡ Age calculated based on available information. (21,30)

In August 2021, the government passed a decree providing migrants with the ability to normalize their status without paying fines following delays due to the pandemic. (31) Civil society reported that this helped migrants to obtain legal residency documents and enroll their children in schools. (1)

Although legislation was passed in 2018 to clarify the minimum age for work in Bolivia at age 14, because the minimum age for work is still lower than the compulsory education age, children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. (18,20) Furthermore, although Bolivian law specifies that education is compulsory through secondary school, it does not specify a start or end age. (21,30) In addition, prohibitions against child trafficking are insufficient because they require the use of threats, force, or coercion to be established for the crime. (21,23)

Although Bolivian law requires employers to grant apprentices the time necessary to attend school, it does not set a minimum age for participation in apprenticeships. (17) Articles 108 and 249 of the Constitution require Bolivian males to perform compulsory military service in accordance with national law. (21) Article 1 of Supreme Decree No. 1875, passed in 2014, lowered the minimum age at which compulsory military service may begin from age 18, as previously established, to age 17, which does not comply with international standards. ## MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforces child labor laws and addresses forced labor of indigenous peoples. (6) Refers cases to the Labor Courts for adjudication of penalties and unpaid wages. (6) Engages municipal Offices of the Child Advocate to ensure the protection of children's rights. (5) Assists in the implementation of the Child and Adolescent Code. (5,18)
Municipal Offices of the Child Advocate	Authorize children from the age of 14 to engage in work and register them in the government's Child and Adolescent Information System (SINNA), pursuant to the 2018 amendment to the Child and Adolescent Code. (1,5,20) Protect the rights and welfare of children, including by accompanying child labor inspectors and referring criminal child labor cases to prosecutors and for social services. (5,18) SINNA is administered by the Ministry of Justice and Transparency. (18,20)
Prosecutor's Office	Enforces criminal laws against forced labor, trafficking of children, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities at the departmental level in coordination with the Attorney General. (5,32) The Attorney General's Office oversees investigations and prosecutions at the national level. The Attorney General's Office National Coordinator's Office oversees regional prosecutors who, in conjunction with the Bolivian National Police, pursue cases of human trafficking and maintain a database of these cases. (32)
Bolivian National Police	Maintain the Special Force in the Fight Against Crime, which runs the Trafficking in Persons Division, comprising 15 investigative human trafficking units and the Police Unit for Migratory Control and Assistance, which patrols national borders. (33)

Labor Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether labor law enforcement agencies took actions to address child labor. Gaps also exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor (MOL) that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including a lack of capacity of the offices that protect working children.

While the government provided some information on its labor law enforcement efforts, figures regarding inspectorate funding were not available for inclusion in this report. (1) The pandemic and subsequent budget cuts severely limited inspection operations beginning in 2020 following government restrictions on movement and a reduction in the number of inspectors. (6) In previous reporting periods, the MOL reported that its budget was insufficient to conduct labor inspections. (1,6)

The Bolivian government has approximately 72 labor inspectors, 12 of whom focus specifically on areas in which child labor and forced labor are known problems. (34,36) However, the number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Bolivia's workforce, which includes approximately 5.9 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Bolivia would need to employ about 394 labor inspectors. (37,38)

The government does not have a system in place to track data on forced child labor, commercial sexual exploitation of children, or engagement of children in illicit activities. (7) The MOL, Prosecutor's Office, and the Ministry of Justice do not have a consolidated database or systematized records of the number of violations found related to child labor. (1,5,7)

While the Municipal Offices of the Child Advocate are charged with registering children ages 14 and older with work permits, reports indicate that up to 15 percent of municipalities in Bolivia lack a local office. Many more are reported to lack sufficient resources and the capacity to perform their mandate and raise awareness of children's rights and their parents' obligations under the Child and Adolescent Code. (5,6,14) In a 2021 interview, the Ombudsman's Office admitted that the registration of adolescent workers by these Offices was lacking and that low numbers of registration reported to MOL headquarters do not reflect the reality of child labor in Bolivia, even though these numbers are not publicly available. (39)

In La Paz and Santa Cruz, Child Advocate Offices reported additional barriers to implementation of the registration section of the Code, including a lack of cooperation from parents to register their working children and prohibitive financial obstacles to obtain the proper paperwork required for registration. (14) While municipalities are required to allot a certain percentage of their budget to the Offices of the Child Advocate, this percentage has decreased over the last few years. (5,6)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether criminal law enforcement agencies in Bolivia took actions to address child labor. Gaps also exist within the operations of the criminal law enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including a lack of training for criminal investigators.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021

Authorities registered 200 criminal complaints involving human trafficking and smuggling between January and June of 2021. More than 75 percent of these cases involved human trafficking and smuggling for the purposes of sexual or labor exploitation, while the remaining cases involved pornography, child pornography, child abduction, and kidnapping. (1) Though the authorities did not report how many of these cases in 2021 involved minors, a study by the Ministry of Government's Citizen Security Observatory analyzed the 368 complaints of trafficking in smuggling registered in 2015 and found 69 percent involved women and girls and 50 percent involved persons under age 17. (1)

In January 2022, officials from the Ministry of Justice and Public Ministry participated in a virtual training on trafficking in persons held by the U.S. State Department's International Law Enforcement Academy. (34,36) However, the Government of Bolivia did not provide evidence of any meaningful efforts to impose legal penalties for violations related to the worst forms of child labor, nor did it take active measures to investigate, prosecute, convict, or sentence perpetrators of these crimes. (1) In addition, the government does not maintain disaggregated information on criminal cases.

Research has shown that children rescued from the worst forms of child labor are often not referred to social services providers because some cities lack shelters and other social services for children. (14,40-42) Shelters maintained by departmental governments are underfunded and child survivors are often cast out of shelters on the basis of fixed timelines—after spending the maximum number of days allowed—rather than an assessment of need. (40) The government did not report the number of children referred to receive social services. While children can report workforce abuse to the Child Advocate's Office, they rarely do. (14)

Low rates of dedicated training on human trafficking also hampered law enforcement efforts. The high rate of rotation among police, prosecutors, and judges—a standard practice to help prevent corruption—leads to insufficient knowledge, lack of experience on human trafficking, and a judicial backlog for these types of cases. (41)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including a lack of efficacy in accomplishing mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor	Coordinates national enforcement efforts on child labor issues. Led by MOL, and includes the ministries of Justice, Education, and Planning, and several NGOs. (5) Requests for information from MOL were unable to determine whether the coordinating body was active during the reporting period. (36)
Plurinational System for the Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents	Coordinates national efforts to manage and implement the Plurinational Plan for Children and Adolescents, the Coordinating Council for Children and Adolescents, and the Congress on Children's Rights. Evaluates and advises on national plans, public policies, reports, and budget allocation relating to children's and adolescents' rights. (18) In coordination with the National Institute of Statistics, monitors and updates SINNA. Led by the Ministry of Justice. (18) Research was unable to determine whether the coordinating body was active during the reporting period. (1)
Plurinational Council against Human Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons	Coordinates anti-trafficking efforts and implements national laws and policies on human trafficking and smuggling. (5,23,43) Chaired by the Minister of Justice and comprising eight ministries, the Public Advocate, and NGOs. (44) In 2021, the council met three times. (34)
Department-Level Councils against Human Trafficking and Smuggling	Coordinate efforts of the Plurinational Council against Human Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons in Bolivia's nine departments. Comprising officials from the Special Force in the Fight Against Crime, MOL, the ministries of Migration and Education, the Human Rights Ombudsman's Office, and NGO representatives. (23,43) Research was unable to determine whether the coordinating body was active during the reporting period. (1)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the government has established policies to address child labor.

Research could not determine any activities undertaken in 2021 to implement previously existing key policies related to child labor. Furthermore, Bolivia's national policy for addressing child labor, the National Plan for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor (2000–2010), expired in 2010 and research did not uncover any efforts by the government to replace or update the plan. (45) While the plan remains expired, since 2010, the government has addressed child labor by conducting several child labor surveys on the following issues: domestic workers, child labor in mining, child labor in the sugarcane industry, and child labor in La Paz and El Alto, as well as the regions of Beni and Pando. (34,36)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 9). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including efficacy in achieving programmatic goals.

Table 9. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Juancito Pinto Subsidy Program†	Government program that provides a conditional cash transfer to all primary and some secondary school students to increase school attendance and reduce the dropout rate. (46) The government continued to support this program during the reporting period. (1)
Safe Terminal Program†	A child sex tourism prevention campaign launched by the Bolivian government in 2018, which includes training, awareness-raising activities, and informational workshops for officials of transport and accommodation companies in the city of La Paz. In the Department of Tarija, the campaign focuses on the development and implementation of codes of ethics and conduct to promote children's rights in private sector companies' corporate social responsibility programs. (40) The government continued to support this program during the reporting period. (1)
Human Rights of Children Working in Sugarcane, Brazil Nuts, and Mining†	Human Rights Ombudsman's Office program that promotes the elimination of the worst forms of child labor and advocates for social and labor protections for working adolescents ages 14 to 17. (47)
Bolivian Foreign Trade Institute's Triple Seal Initiative	Initiative of the Department of Santa Cruz's Ministry of Labor. Collaborative effort with the Bolivian Institute of Standardization and Quality, UNICEF, and ILO to develop a voluntary certification program that recognizes companies that comply with Bolivian law and ILO conventions on child labor, forced labor, and worker discrimination in the production of their goods. (48,49) This initiative and the increasing mechanization of the industry have led to a reported near elimination of child labor in sugarcane, as reported through inspections. (34,36,50)

† Program is funded by the Government of Bolivia.

In 2021, UNICEF Bolivia supported the expansion of the "Friendly Markets for Children and Adolescents" initiative from Santa Cruz to Cobija and El Alto. (1) This program trains volunteers from local universities and market union members to offer alternatives to parents at risk of encouraging child labor, such as tutoring, supervised childcare, and support in enrolling their children in school. (1) The 2020 Juancito Pinto program provided $73 million (504 million Bolivianos) directly to the more than 2.3 million participating students to encourage school retention in primary and secondary schools; information for this reporting period was unavailable. (1) In 2015, the government issued the "Patriotic Agenda" law which provides a plan to decrease poverty by 2025, and thereby reduces the risk of child labor due to poverty and the need for familiar work. (34,36)

Although the Government of Bolivia continued to support the above social programs to address child labor in 2021, research could not determine specific activities undertaken. (1,51)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

In 2021, Bosnia and Herzegovina made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Republika Srpska National Assembly adopted amendments to its Criminal Code to include three new categories of exploitation—servitude, forced begging, and additional forms of sexual exploitation—and introduced higher penalties for trafficking children. Additionally, the Bosnia and Herzegovina Council of Ministers adopted a national-level action plan to facilitate implementation of the Strategy to Suppress Trafficking in Human Beings in Bosnia and Herzegovina (2020–2023). However, children in Bosnia and Herzegovina are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging. Social programs dedicated to assisting children involved in forced begging do not have adequate resources, and representatives from the Ministries of Labor are not included in the National Anti-Trafficking Strike Force, which limits coordination efforts. Furthermore, laws on the minimum age for work do not meet international standards because they do not apply to children who are self-employed or working outside of formal employment relationships.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging. (1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in BiH.

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Use in the production of pornography (1,2,9,10)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Street begging is the most common form of child labor in Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH). (2,9) Organized groups sometimes traffic children to lucrative locations, both domestically and internationally, in regional and EU countries, where they are forced to beg. (2,9,11,12)

Children in the largest minority group in BiH, the Roma, are the most vulnerable group exposed to the worst forms of child labor due to discrimination on numerous grounds, including difficulty in accessing education. The cost of school supplies and uniforms may be prohibitively expensive for some families. (7,13,14) Roma students also face discrimination from teachers, peers, and school administrators, which has resulted in a disproportionate number of Roma children being enrolled in schools for children with intellectual disabilities. (15) In addition, some Roma children lack birth registration documents, which are required to attend school in BiH. UNHCR reports indicate that approximately 69 Roma inhabitants in BiH, including some children, were designated as being at risk of statelessness in 2021, and the national government has continued to work with UNHCR to improve processes related to establishing citizenship. (16,17) Children who are classified as stateless are at higher risk for labor exploitation. (10,17, 18) Additionally, migrants—particularly unaccompanied children—from Afghanistan, Pakistan, Iraq, and other countries who travel through BiH are potential targets for human traffickers. (19)

Schools in the Republika Srpska (RS) entity deny the right of some Bosniak children to receive instruction in the Bosnian language; as a result, these children sometimes travel long distances to the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (FBiH) entity to receive education in their language. (2,17,20) In addition, discrimination persists under the "Two Schools Under One Roof" practice between Bosniaks and Croats in FBiH. Under this system, Bosniak and Croat children are in segregated classes following separate curricula in the same school building. (21) This creates obstacles for students who wish to attend schools other than those which match their ethnic identity and also enables ethnic discrimination in schools, which can lead to absenteeism. (2,17,20) Children with disabilities generally face barriers to access education, which may make them vulnerable to child labor. Although the number of school programs for children with disabilities is increasing, parents of children with disabilities sometimes receive insufficient support from the government, and some schools are unable to provide accommodations for the children's disabilities. (20) Sources indicated that the government has not allocated enough financial resources for adequate implementation of inclusive education initiatives, particularly for students with disabilities. (1,18-20)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

BiH has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) is a democratic republic with a bicameral parliament. Governmental responsibilities lie with the state; the two entities of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (FBiH) and the Republika Srpska (RS); and the self-governing Brčko District (BD). (22) The Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina has established laws and regulations related to child labor, at the state, entity, and district levels (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Bosnia and Herzegovina's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the minimum age for work.

‡ Age calculated based on available information (32)

During the reporting period, the Republika Srpska National Assembly (RSNA) adopted legislation to amend Article 145 of its Criminal Code to include three new categories of exploitation: servitude, forced begging, and additional forms of sexual exploitation. The new amendments introduce a minimum prison sentence of 3 years and a maximum of 20 years for offenders. (10) Additionally, the RSNA passed an amendment to Article 146 of its Criminal Code to increase the maximum sentence for trafficking of children from 8 years to 10 years. The amendment also stipulates that a sentence of 10 to 12 years should be issued to officials on duty who commit crimes related to trafficking in children, in addition to anyone who commits a related crime resulting in severe harm or the death of a victim. (10)

The labor laws of FBiH, RS, and BD do not conform to international standards that require all children to be protected by the minimum age to work because the labor laws do not apply to children who are self-employed or working outside of formal employment relationships. In addition, the FBiH, RS, and BD do not include street begging or illicit activities in their lists of hazardous occupations prohibited for children. (23-25) Although the Criminal Code of Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) criminalizes human trafficking for forced labor, it fails to specifically outlaw forced labor, debt bondage, and slavery separately from trafficking in persons. (28)

Laws related to illicit activities in BiH are not sufficient because using, procuring, and offering children for the production and trafficking of drugs is not criminally prohibited. The laws of BiH and FBiH do not meet international standards for prohibition of commercial sexual exploitation of children, and legislation in BiH, FBiH, RS, and BD does not meet international standards for the recruitment of minors by non-state armed groups, as their criminal codes fail to explicitly prohibit this offense. (27)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including a lack of appropriate referral mechanisms.

Officials indicated that there were sufficient resources provided to the Labor Inspectorates during the reporting period and that the number of labor inspectors appeared to be adequate. The Labor Inspectorate is authorized to assess administrative penalties up to approximately $627 (1,000 konvertibilna marka), and labor inspectors in both entities and BD may visit any formal sector inspection site without prior supervisory approval. (10)

No labor inspectors received training on detecting hazardous child labor in agriculture, including handling agricultural chemicals. (2) Complaint mechanisms exist in both entities and BD, including a mechanism for receiving online complaints, but research found that BiH does not have an official system for referring children identified during labor inspections to social services providers unless they are victims or potential victims of human trafficking. (10) Additionally, labor inspectors do not have a mandate to inspect informal work. (23)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in BiH took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including insufficient training for responsible enforcement authorities.

Forced begging cases are pursued by cantonal- and entity-level police and cantonal-, entity-, and state-level prosecutors. (2,8,35) Children who are detained for begging are generally referred to social services providers, which are often run by NGOs with funding from the Ministry of Security (MOS) or the Ministry for Human Rights and Refugees. (2,8,36) However, law enforcement officials sometimes penalize child victims of forced begging by issuing fines against the children. (37,38) During the reporting period, FBiH authorities initiated investigations of 16 suspects for trafficking of children for the purpose of forced begging. In addition, FBiH authorities sentenced seven individuals to sentences ranging from 1 year and 9 months to 8 years in prison for trafficking of children. (10,39) In RS, authorities initiated investigations against a total of three persons for trafficking of children, with one indictment raised. Additionally, the Supreme Court of the RS confirmed a prior guilty verdict against an individual per Article 198 of the Criminal Code, resulting in 5 years of imprisonment for trafficking of minors. (10)

Research indicates that law enforcement officials and social workers would benefit from additional training on identifying children used for forced labor and begging, as these cases are often classified as child negligence or simply Roma custom instead. (2,3,8) The courts sometimes impose sentences under the legal minimum, decrease the severity of the sentences, or dismiss the charges against the perpetrators altogether. (2,7,8) In addition, enforcement officials are often unwilling to pursue investigations and prosecutions against parents involved in the trafficking of their children, particularly for forced labor, and the shelters subsequently return the children to the parents who were involved in the trafficking process. (2,10) The government did not publish information pertaining to criminal law enforcement efforts during the reporting period.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including lack of inclusion of all relevant agencies.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Department of the State Coordinator for Combating Trafficking in Persons (State Coordinator) within MOS	Coordinates human trafficking victim protection efforts among relevant ministries at the entity-level and among prosecutors at the state-, entity-, and local-levels, as well as with NGOs. (7,8,10) Oversees the human trafficking database, which includes data from NGOs, the State Investigative and Protection Agency (SIPA), Border Police (SBP), and police agencies and prosecutors' offices at all levels. (8,10,40) Publishes data from this database in its annual report on human trafficking. Oversees shelter management and monitors NGO compliance with the agreed-upon provisions on victims' assistance. (10,40) During the reporting period, the State Coordinator prepared a report on activities related to the implementation of the Trafficking in Persons Strategy 2020–2023, which was approved by the BiH Council of Ministers in May 2021. (10)
Strike Force for Combating Trafficking in Persons and Organized Illegal Migration (Anti-Trafficking Strike Force)	Coordinates human trafficking investigations across government agencies. (10,40) Convenes monthly, with additional meetings scheduled as needed. (8,11) Chaired by the Chief State Prosecutor, includes BiH, FBiH, RS, and BD ministries and agencies. (1,7) The Strike Force continued to meet regularly in 2021. (10)
Strategy Implementation Monitoring Team	Responsible for the government's TIP-monitoring tasks previously undertaken by the Interministerial Working Group, which was dissolved in 2021. During the reporting period, the Team prepared its first report on the implementation of the National Trafficking in Persons Strategy in 2020. (10)
Regional Monitoring Teams	Facilitate anti-human trafficking coordination among state-, entity-, and cantonal-level institutions, as well as between NGOs and intergovernmental organizations. Include labor inspectors. (10) Seventeen of the Regional Monitoring Teams adopted action plans during the reporting period. (10)

Although the Anti-Trafficking Strike Force is meant to coordinate anti-trafficking efforts across agencies, representatives from FBiH and RS Ministries of Labor are not included. (2,7,39)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies that are consistent with relevant international standards on child labor (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Strategy to Suppress Trafficking in Human Beings in Bosnia and Herzegovina (2020–2023)	Includes activities to prevent forced labor, including child labor. (2) In October 2021, the Council of Ministers adopted a national-level Action Plan to facilitate implementation of the Strategy. Ten of the regional monitoring teams, in addition to authorities in BD and RS, drafted and approved action plans for implementation of the Strategy. (10)
Guidelines for Work of Regional Monitoring Teams	Enhance the cooperation of monitoring team members and the National Referral Mechanism. (8,41) Include a section on mixed migration flows, in which unaccompanied migrant children and victims of human trafficking are addressed. (8) The regional monitoring teams continued to operate normally during the reporting period. (10)
Protocol on Cooperation and Treatment in Cases of Unlawful Behavior to the Detriment of Children in Sarajevo Canton	Prevents begging, exploitation of children, and abuse of children in Canton Sarajevo. (42,43) Sets rules on state cooperation on victim protection and mandates the provision of physical, psychological, health, and social protection for children. (43) The policy was formally active during the reporting period, but did not operate adequately in practice with numerous existing gaps in knowledge of professionals, particularly prosecutors, on how to properly refer victims. (39)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (10)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including a lack of adequate funding.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Registration Project	UNHCR-funded project, implemented by the NGO Vaša Prava , which promotes the registration of Roma people to increase their access to social benefits and schools. Has helped 1,740 individuals register for citizenship since 2009 and continues to provide legal assistance to foreign victims of trafficking. (1,11) Authorities continued to implement the registration project during the reporting period. (10)
Daily Centers†	Center for Social Welfare-supported and NGO-operated drop-in centers in seven locations across the country, designed to assist vulnerable children, especially street children. (7,8,11) Provide direct assistance for children, including educational activities, counseling, food, and hygiene. (2) Sarajevo's Center for Social Welfare Mobile Team also engages in daily outreach to children on the streets and to families in vulnerable communities throughout the capital region. (2) In 2021, the seven daily centers operated normally throughout the year. (10)
Assistance for Trafficking Victims†	Government program that allocates small grants to local NGOs for the provision of shelter and social services to victims of human trafficking, including counseling, educational assistance and job training for domestic victims, and visa and legal services for foreign victims of human trafficking. (1,2) The program formally existed during the reporting period. However, due to the lack of a state budget in 2021, the government did not disburse any funding to local NGOs that provide services to trafficking victims, thus severely endangering their operation. (39)
Prevention and Fight Against Trafficking in Human Beings in Bosnia and Herzegovina	Joint project by the EU and the Council of Europe. Debuted in October 2019 and offers $790,720 in funding over 3 years to assist BiH in its efforts to better identify victims of human trafficking and heighten public awareness of human trafficking. (38,44) Plans to achieve goals through 12 trainings for labor inspectors, police officers, healthcare providers, and education professionals. (1) During the reporting period, 105 authorities (including 30 labor inspectors) participated in trainings provided through the project. (38) Additionally, the Council of Europe's Group of Experts on Action Against Trafficking in Human Beings (GRETA) conducted a visit to Sarajevo to gauge the status of human trafficking victims' access to legal assistance and other forms of support. (44)

† Program is funded by the Government of BiH.

Because labor inspectors do not have a mandate to inspect informal work, staff from Daily Centers are often the first to identify children engaged in hazardous street work. Sarajevo's Mobile Team staff continues to lack sufficient resources for their work, especially reliable transportation. (10,45) Although most Daily Centers collaborate with local Centers for Social Welfare, Daily Centers are not institutionalized and, therefore, lack consistent financial and technical support. (10,45) This may limit the ability of Daily Centers to identify and assist children working on the streets. In addition, government support for outreach to street children in areas outside Sarajevo varies significantly. (2) Although the government provides some social services for low-income families through the Centers for Social Welfare, many families do not receive enough assistance to reduce their reliance on child labor, especially begging. (10,45,46)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

In 2021, Botswana made minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government secured a conviction and imposed a 10-year sentence on an individual for forced labor of a child in domestic servitude. However, children in Botswana are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and forced labor in cattle herding and domestic service. Key gaps remain in the country's legal framework, including the lack of a minimum age for compulsory education and a list of hazardous work activities for children. The government did not provide information on its labor law enforcement efforts for inclusion in this report. In addition, social programs do not always reach children in child labor, especially those engaged in cattle herding and domestic work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Botswana are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and forced labor in cattle herding and domestic service. (1,2) Table I provides key indicators on children's work and education in Botswana. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table I. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Working (% and population)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2015, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2022. (3)

Data were unavailable from International Labor Organization's analysis, 2022. (4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Herding and spraying of cattle (5,6)
Services	Street work, including vending (7)
	Domestic work (8,9)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1,2,10)
	Forced labor in cattle herding and domestic service (1)

† Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in Botswana are victims of commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1,2) Research indicates that some children residing in the Dukwi Refugee Camp are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation as they await decisions regarding their refugee status. (1,7) Some parents in poor rural communities send their children to work as domestic servants in cities, or at farms or cattle posts, increasing their vulnerability to forced labor. (1) Children, particularly children from the San minority ethnic group, work on commercial farms in the Ghanzi Region, tending to and herding cattle. (2,8) An NGO reported that one of the work activities children perform on commercial farms is the "dipping" (spraying) of cattle, a process to remove ticks and flies. Such work may expose children to hazardous chemicals. (8) On some farms, employers may withhold food rations unless children perform work. (1,5,8) Children working in domestic service settings are exposed to various conditions that are indicative of forced labor including confinement, denial of promised educational opportunities and basic necessities, and physical, verbal, and sexual abuse. (1)

Botswana law provides for free basic education. The costs of books, uniforms, and other materials may be waived for children from poorer families; however insufficient transportation to schools in remote regions of Botswana and lack of materials in indigenous languages create educational barriers for children from minority ethnic groups. (2,11,12) In addition, school enrollment requires an identity document, such as a birth certificate or national identity card. (1) The government allows all children to enroll in primary education, even without these documents; however, migrant children and children born outside of health care facilities, or whose parents did not register them at birth, may not be able to enroll in secondary schools or register for national exams. (2,13) Schools also often lack adequate resources for students with disabilities, and children of the San ethnic group have limited access to educational facilities, including traveling long distances to reach schools and encountering language barriers and prejudice within schools, which cause children to drop out. (2,12,14,15) Moreover, pervasive physical and sexual abuse, including gender-based violence, within schools, by both teachers and peers, contributes to children leaving education early and becoming vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. (5,7,16,17)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Botswana has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Articles 2 and 107 of the Employment Act (18)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 2 and 110 of the Employment Act (18)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 2 and 71 of the Employment Act; Section 114 of the Children's Act; Articles 9–10 of the Anti-Human Trafficking Act; Section 262 of the Penal Code (18,19)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Section 114 of the Children's Act; Article 175 of the Penal Code; Articles 9 and 10 of the Anti-Human Trafficking Act (19,20)

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Sections 25 and 57–59 of the Children's Act; Sections 9 and 10 of the Anti-Human Trafficking Act (19,20)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Section 60 of the Children's Act (20)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Section 17 of the Botswana Defense Force Act (21)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	N/A*
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Section 26 of the Children's Act (20)
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Section 18 of the Children's Act (20)

* Country has no conscription. (21)

The Employment Act allows children to conduct light work activities at age 14, with restrictions on the number of hours a child can work during a single day and in a week, and includes a requirement that the Labor Commissioner approve any forms of work outside of domestic service; however, the government has yet to determine the conditions or types of light work activities permitted for children. (11) The Employment Act also prohibits night work and hazardous underground work for children, but the government has not promulgated regulations identifying hazardous work activities for children. (18) Although the government compiled a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations, including the handling of pesticides and agricultural chemicals, the list has not yet been approved. (10,12) In addition, legal protections for children from commercial sexual exploitation do not meet international standards because the use of children for prostitution is not criminally prohibited. (20)

Despite the provision of free basic education, there is not a compulsory education age, which may increase children's vulnerability to child labor. (12)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor	Enforces child labor laws and conducts inspections under the Employment Act. (18,22) Facilitates coordination with local leaders and law enforcement officers. Posts labor inspectors to District Council offices to carry out their duties. (22) Coordinates with the Ministry of Local Government and Rural Development (MLGRD) to respond to cases of child labor and place children in safe environments. (7,23)
District and Municipal Council Child Welfare Divisions	Enforce child labor laws at the local level. (22) The District and Municipal Council Child Welfare Divisions report to the Social Protection Department under the MLGRD (24)
Botswana Police Service (BPS)	Responds to cases of labor law violation, including child labor violations, based on referrals from the Ministry of Labor. (25) Investigates cases of the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation of children and child trafficking. (22)
Ministry of Justice	Monitors suspected human trafficking cases and leads the Human Trafficking (Prohibition) Committee. (22)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Botswana took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including insufficient financial and human resource allocation.

Under the Employment Act, child labor violations are criminal offenses, resulting in 12 months imprisonment; as such, Botswana labor inspectors refer violations to police for investigation and imposition of penalties. (18)

The government did not provide complete information on its labor law enforcement efforts to address child labor for inclusion in this report. (25) In addition, the labor inspectorate lacks sufficient resources to adequately enforce labor laws. (25) Some of Botswana's largest administrative districts have only one or two labor inspectors. (5,25)

The government reported that 54 labor inspectors participated in a workshop on modern inspection techniques during the reporting period but did not indicate whether this number comprised the entire inspectorate. (24) Research has been unable to determine precisely how many labor inspectors Botswana currently employs. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in countries with developing economies, Botswana would need to employ about 66 labor inspectors to adequately protect its workforce of nearly 1,000,000 workers. (7,27,28) Evidence suggests that inadequate numbers of labor inspectors may be hindering enforcement in Botswana, especially in the agricultural sector. For example, there is only 1 labor inspector assigned to the Ghanzi District, a district that spans 117,000 square kilometers and where there are reports of child labor at farms and cattle posts. (5,25) Furthermore, enforcement efforts may be hindered by limits on labor inspectors' authority. Labor inspectors are not authorized to inspect domestic households, and some labor inspectors have faced obstacles in accessing large farms, such as locked gates or denial of entry, inhibiting their ability to identify underage workers. (5,7)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Botswana took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including lack of published information on criminal law enforcement efforts.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Unknown (25)	Yes (2)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A (25)	N/A (2)
Refresher Courses Provided	Unknown (25)	Unknown (2)
Number of Investigations	2 (29)	Unknown (2)
Number of Violations Found	2 (29)	Unknown (2)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	2 (29)	1 (30)
Number of Convictions	Unknown (25)	1 (30)
Imposed Penalties for Violations Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Unknown (25)	Yes (30)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (25)	Yes (2)

The government did not provide complete information on its criminal law enforcement efforts, including refresher trainings for criminal law enforcement investigators and the number of investigations related to the worst forms of child labor, for inclusion in this report. (25) During the reporting period, Botswana courts convicted a Zimbabwean woman for bringing a 16 year-old child into Botswana for forced domestic servitude. The court imposed a 10-year sentence, marking the first conviction and imposed penalty for human trafficking in 2 years. (30) Although the government convicted four other individuals and initiated two new prosecutions under the trafficking in persons law during the reporting period, the ages of the victims and whether the cases pertained to the worst forms of child labor are unknown. (25,31)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including inefficacy in accomplishing mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Advisory Committee on Child Labor	Oversees government policies and efforts to prevent and eliminate child labor. Reports to the government three to four times a year. (2) Includes representatives from government agencies, various NGOs, worker federations, and employer organizations. (2) Led by the Ministry of Labor, with participation from the MLGRD, Ministry of Finance, and the Office of the President. (13)
Child Labor Committees	Identify child laborers at the village level. Include social workers; schoolteachers; members of the Village Development Committees, which are local government structures; labor inspectors; and community leaders, including chiefs and priests. (2)
Human Trafficking (Prohibition) Committee	Provides an interministerial reporting and referral mechanism for children subjected to human trafficking. (13) Led by the Ministry of Justice, with representation from MELSD, BPS, the Directorate of Public Prosecutions, and ministries responsible for gender affairs, social protection, immigration, and transportation. (22,32) The committee met three times during the reporting period and facilitated the development of standard operating procedures for repatriation of trafficking survivors to their countries of origin. (33)

Research could not determine whether coordinating bodies were active during the reporting period. (2,31) The Ministry of Justice reported the need for technical support, training, and increased coordination among agencies to address human trafficking. It indicated that referral and rehabilitation services for human trafficking survivors are also needed. (34)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including a lack of implementation.

Botswana

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Outlines the government's plan to address child labor through legislation and policy. Includes awareness-raising programs and training on child labor for relevant stakeholders and implementers. (22)

Research indicates that the government is not actively supporting implementation of key national policies for the prevention and elimination of child labor. (2) Child labor elimination and prevention strategies are not included in relevant national policies, including the Education and Training Sector Strategic Plan and the Botswana National Youth Policy. (36,37)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Government-Funded Programs to Prevent and Eliminate Child Labor†	Government-funded programs that aim to prevent child labor and increase protections for vulnerable children. These include: NGO-run shelters that cater to human trafficking survivors, including children; the National School Feeding Program, which provides meals to children (grades one through seven) in all public primary schools in the country; the Remote Area Development Program, which provides a second meal to school children living in remote areas and children from marginalized communities; the Orphan Care Program, which provides orphans with meals and subsidizes the cost of school fees and transportation costs; and the Needy Children and Needy Students program, managed by the MLGRD, which provides families with free meals, toiletries, and school uniforms. (22) Research could not determine whether activities were undertaken to implement other relevant government-funded programs during the reporting period, such as the National School Feeding Program, the Remote Area Dweller Program, the Orphan Care Program, and the Needy Children and Needy Students program.

† Program is funded by the Government of Botswana.

There are no government-run shelters that cater to child survivors of human trafficking. While the government funds and contracts with NGO-run shelters that serve this population, it does not directly provide such services. (2) An NGO reported that established shelters lack resources to attend to the needs of older children. (6)

Although Botswana has programs that target child labor, the design and implementation of these programs are insufficient to fully address the scope of the problem, especially in commercial sexual exploitation, cattle herding, and domestic work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Botswana (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Establish provisions specifying the types of light work acceptable for children age 14.	2016 – 2021
	Determine by national law or regulation the types of hazardous work prohibited for children, after consultation with employers' and workers' organizations.	2009 – 2021
	Ensure that the use of children in prostitution is criminally prohibited.	2020 – 2021
	Establish a compulsory education age consistent with the minimum age of employment.	2010 – 2021
Enforcement	Publish information regarding labor law enforcement efforts.	2016 – 2021
	Ensure that the labor inspectorate has sufficient human and financial resources to adequately enforce labor laws, including on farms and cattle posts.	2020 – 2021

In 2021, Brazil made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government published two updated versions of the national "Dirty List" containing information on employers that the Ministry of Labor and Welfare found to be using slave labor, including that of children. It also established the Intersectoral Commission to Combat Violence Against Children and Adolescents, with the aim of consolidating public policies relevant to addressing all types of violence against children and adolescents. Furthermore, the government updated the Federal Pact for the Eradication of Forced Labor, with the objective of promoting, improving, and maximizing communication between entities involved in addressing slave labor and extending participation to all 5,000 municipalities in the country. Lastly, the Ministry of Citizenship's Monitoring System of the Child Labor Eradication Program, which tracks actions taken by state and municipal governments in support of the National Program to Eradicate Child Labor, registered 12,756 activities carried out nationwide to address child labor. However, children in Brazil are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also engage in child labor in agriculture, including in the production of coffee. Although Brazil made meaningful efforts in all relevant areas during the reporting period, prohibitions against child trafficking require the use of threats, violence, coercion, fraud, or abuse to be established for the crime of child trafficking and, therefore, do not meet international labor standards. The reported number of labor inspectors is likely not sufficient to provide adequate coverage of the workforce, and local governments lack the capacity to fully implement and monitor the National Program to Eradicate Child Labor and other social protection programs.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Brazil are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1,2) Children also engage in child labor in agriculture, including in the production of coffee. (3,4) The 2019 National Household Survey, published in December 2020, estimated that approximately 1.8 million children ages 5 to 17 engaged in child labor—337,000 children ages 5 to 13, and 1.4 million adolescents ages 14 to 17. Of the 1.8 million children found in situations of child labor, 706,000 children were found to be working in hazardous conditions. (5) The survey also revealed a decrease of approximately 200,000 child laborers since 2016. (5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Brazil. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

The COVID-19 pandemic continued to affect the Brazilian economy, causing an increase in the number of children engaging in child labor. During the reporting period, approximately 47,000 children and adolescents between the ages of 5 and 17 were found working in the State of Espírito Santo in agriculture and street vending. The State of Espírito Santo also found that some children were subjected to prostitution and drug trafficking. (40) In June 2021, Rio de Janeiro's Municipal Social Assistance Department found 20 children and adolescents working as food scavengers and selling sweets on the streets in a popular local market. (41) In addition, São Paulo State registered 3,558 children engaged in child labor during the first semester of 2021; of this number, 2,085 children were living and working on the streets, while 967 were involved in illicit activities, such as drug trafficking, and 126 were subjected to commercial sexual exploitation. (12)

The overall scope and magnitude of commercial sexual exploitation of children is unknown; however, the latest biennial report published by the Federal Highway Police, in collaboration with Childhood Brazil, identified 3,651 areas along highways throughout the country where children are vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation. Areas are assessed by evaluating the risk of exploitation and the implementation of preventative mechanisms and strategies that exist within each state. (2) According to the report, the states of Bahia, Goiás, Pará, Minas Gerais and Ceará have the highest risk for this type of exploitation. Furthermore, the recent report also indicated a 0.4 percent decrease in these vulnerable areas since its previous publication. (2) Child sex tourism is particularly common in tourist and coastal areas, and girls from other South American countries are also exploited for commercial sex in Brazil. (34,42)

The ILO and the Labor Prosecution Office (MPT) of Brazil published a report indicating that at least 8,000 children and adolescents in the country were found to be working in the production of cocoa. The study was conducted between July 2017 and June 2018, with the aim of exposing companies and holding them accountable for their child labor and forced labor violations. (43,44)

Research found that some schools, particularly those in rural areas, are overcrowded, have poor infrastructure, and lack basic resources and teachers. (12,45) In previous years, birth registration documents were required for school enrollment, which occasionally caused delays in processing school registration while children were being registered for birth certificates. However, in November 2020, the Ministry of Education officially published Resolution No. 1, which removed the need for birth registration documents for school enrollment, including by migrant, refugee, stateless, and asylum-seeking children. (46)

A survey by the education-focused NGO Education for All (Todos pela Educação), using data from the second quarter of 2021's Continuous Household Survey (PNAD), found that the number of children ages 6 to 14 who were out of school grew 171 percent compared to the same calendar period in 2019, resulting in 244,000 children out of school, the largest number since 2012. Furthermore, the percentage of school-enrolled children fell from 98 percent in 2019 to 96.2 percent in 2021. (47)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Brazil has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 403 of the Labor Code (48)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 2 of the Hazardous Work List (49)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Hazardous Work List (49)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 149 and 149-A of the Penal Code (50,51)

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	17	Article 127 of the Military Service Regulation (54)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	Yes		Article 5 of the Military Service Law (55)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	17	Article 4 of the National Education Law (56)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 4 of the National Education Law (56)

The national "Dirty List," which contains information on employers that are found to be using slave labor, including that of children, was updated in April 2021 with 19 names and in October 2021 with 13 names. (57-59)

Prohibitions against child trafficking require the use of threats, violence, coercion, fraud, or abuse to be established for the crime of child trafficking and, therefore, do not meet international labor standards. (51) As the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. (48,56)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Welfare (MTP)	Oversees the Secretariat of Labor, which is responsible for the enforcement of labor laws, including those related to child labor and forced labor. Its Under Secretariat for Labor Inspection is responsible for conducting unannounced inspections at sites in which forced labor is suspected, including forced child labor. (12,60) Upon finding children in hazardous working conditions, labor inspectors immediately remove and return them to their families or refer them to social services providers. (12) In 2021, the government re-established the Ministry of Labor, which had been incorporated into the Ministry of Economy in 2019, as the MTP. (61)
Labor Prosecution Office (MPT)	Prosecutes child labor and forced labor violations by working with prosecutors from its National Committee to Combat Child and Adolescent Labor, an in-house body that coordinates efforts to address child labor. Collects fines for forced labor violations and allocates funds for initiatives that address child labor and forced labor. (12) Led by the Ministry of Public Union. (62)
Military, Civil, and Federal Police	The Military Police operate at the local level and refer cases to the Civil Police for investigation. The Federal Police, in turn, work on interstate or international cases and maintain a database to track cases of human trafficking for sexual exploitation. (12) The Federal Highway Police help identify areas in which children are at high risk of commercial sexual exploitation. (12) In 2021, the Federal Police expanded its capacity to respond to cases of human trafficking and forced labor. (59,63) Previously, the Service for the Repression of Trafficking in Persons and Human Smuggling (S RTP) was the only office, within the Federal Police, to lead these investigations; however, during the reporting period, an additional office was established, the Nucleus to Repress Forced Labor, to respond to cases of forced labor. In addition, the S RTP increased in size, including a police delegate leading the division and supported by three federal police officers and additional staff support, depending on the specific mission, with a focus on human trafficking and smuggling. (59,63)
Ministry of Justice and Public Security (MJSP)	Leads efforts to address human trafficking and oversees the operations of Advanced Posts ( Postos Avançados ) and state-run Anti-Trafficking Coordination Centers ( Núcleos de Enfrentamento ). Provides guidance to federal, state, and local government officials on referrals for victims of human trafficking, including to Anti-Trafficking Coordination Centers, Specialized Social Assistance Reference Centers, and NGOs. (12) Eight Advanced Posts operate throughout the country to identify human traffickers and potential victims in high-transit areas, including airports and bus stations. (63)

Organization/Agency	Role
Special Courts for Childhood and Youth	Oversee legislative issues related to the eradication of child labor and guarantee the fair and adequate entry of adolescents into the labor force, in compliance with the 1990 Child and Adolescent Statute. Provide protection and care to victims through court psychologists. (12,64)
State Councils for Child and Adolescent Rights	Ensure compliance at state, federal, and local levels with public policies legislating the human rights of children and adolescents. (12) Chaired by members of government and civil society. Councils can levy Guardianship Counsels, Special Protection Precincts, and solicit judicial action by the MJSP, Public Defenders, and the Special Courts for Childhood and Youth. (12)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Brazil took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor and Welfare (MTP) that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including insufficient human resource allocation.

According to the Under Secretariat for Labor Inspection, 1,838 children and adolescents were removed from situations of child labor during the reporting period. Reports indicate that these operations covered several sectors with a focus on open air markets, street commerce on beaches and in public places, and garbage dumps in the states of Maranhão, Bahia, Espírito Santo, Ceará, and Paraíba. (12) In February 2021, the Regional Office of the Ministry of Labor in Minas Gerais State rescued 11 people, including minors, from a ceramics factory. The factory owner signed a conduct adjustment agreement with the Public Ministry of Minas Gerais and issued severance payments to each of the rescued workers, including those below age 18. (69) Also in February, labor inspectors removed 39 children, between the ages of 7 and 17, and cited 16 employers during a coordinated action in Bahia State in the capital city of Salvador and the surrounding region. (70) In addition, in Ceará State, 149 children were rescued from situations of child labor, which was a significant contrast to the 30 rescued in 2020. Of the 149 children rescued, 148 were found working in activities determined by Brazilian legislation as the worst forms of child labor, such as construction and garbage collection in landfills. (71) The inspections in Ceará were conducted by the MTP's labor inspection unit and focused on planned mapping efforts of 177 possible incidences of child labor in the state. (71) The Under Secretariat of Labor Inspection's Special Mobile Inspection Groups (GEFM) also removed three minors, ages 9, 10, and 13, along with their parents and two younger siblings, from a coffee and eucalyptus plantation. The three minors fertilized and cleaned around the property, including the owner's house. (72) Moreover, the GEFM rescued 116 workers, including 5 adolescents, from a Goiás farm supplying straw to Brazil's largest straw cigarettes manufacturer. (27) In September, for the first time in 10 years, labor inspectors identified six adolescents, ages 15 to 17, working in the fruit industry in the Petrolina region of Pernambuco, including on grape and mango farms. Four farms were inspected and child labor was identified on three of them. (12)

According to the Under Secretariat for Labor Inspection, when children are found in situations of child labor, including in hazardous working conditions, they are immediately removed from the situation. Relevant data related to the violations are collected and forwarded to social services providers within the child and adolescent protection network, and reports are sent to the Public Ministry for further guidance. (73) In addition, children over age 14 may be referred to the country's apprenticeship program. (73) The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Brazil's workforce, which includes approximately 99.56 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Brazil would need to employ roughly 6,637 labor inspectors. (74,75)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Brazil took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including insufficient efforts to hold violators of child labor laws accountable in accordance with the law.

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021

Although the government did not provide criminal law enforcement data for the reporting period, reports indicate that a U.S. citizen was found guilty and sentenced to 9 years in prison under the Brazilian Penal Code 218-B for "Enticement of a Minor for Sexual Exploitation;" however, the case has been appealed and the accused remains free. The victim's mother was also sentenced under the same violation, receiving a sentence of 12 years in prison, though she also remains free, pending appeal. (12)

In April 2021, during an operation to address child labor exploitation in the state of Bahia, Salvador's Specialized Police for the Repression of Crimes against Children and Adolescents identified more than 20 minors begging in supermarket parking lots and at traffic lights throughout the city. These children were accompanied by adults, and five of them were determined to have been subjected to forced begging. (39) In addition, during the reporting period, Federal Police agents rescued three Bolivian adolescents, ages 16 and 17, working in a clothing factory in a small town in the interior of São Paulo. All three victims were imprisoned in a small house behind the factory, with poor sanitary conditions and without access to the outside world. (36)

The Federal Police, under Operation Harem, infiltrated an international sex trafficking ring and arrested six members in Brazil, Spain, and Portugal in April 2021. Allegedly, the network is led by a Brazilian and extends over 15 countries across multiple continents with over 200 women, including minors, recruited through social media and messaging applications with promises of money and work in modeling agencies. (76)

The Judiciary, the MPT, and the federal and state police have databases to track cases of human trafficking for sexual exploitation; however, information from these databases is not shared in a standardized way across relevant agencies. (12,77) In addition, reports indicate that the judicial system does not sufficiently hold perpetrators accountable for child labor law violations, including forced child labor, which may lead to a sense of impunity among violators. (42)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including lack of efficacy in accomplishing mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor (CONAETI)	Leads implementation of the National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Working Adolescents. Re-established in December 2020 and restructured from its original multipartite composition to a tripartite structure made up of six government, six employer, and six employee representatives. (66) Government representatives include the ministries of Economy, Education, Citizenship, Health, Agriculture and Supply, and Women, Family and Human Rights. In addition, six special representatives are allowed to participate in meetings as observers, including from government agencies and national and international organizations, though these special representatives are not allowed to vote on any new initiatives. (78) In September 2021, conducted one meeting, after its re-establishment, to discuss general housekeeping matters and internal regulations. (12)
Intersectoral Commission to Combat Violence Against Children and Adolescents*	Established by Federal Decree No. 10.701 in 2021, thereby replacing the Intersectoral Commission to Combat Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents. Aims to consolidate public policies relevant to addressing violence against children and adolescents, including physical, sexual, psychological, and institutional violence. (12,79) Also aims to draft, monitor, and evaluate a national plan to address violence against children and adolescents in coordination with the National Council for the Rights of Children and Adolescents (CONANDA). Led by the Ministry of Women, Family and Human Rights, and includes representatives from MJSP, and the ministries of Education, Citizenship, Health, and Tourism. (12,79) In July 2021, the Commission conducted its first meeting and created an agenda for the drafting of a national action plan. (79)
National Council for the Rights of Children and Adolescents (CONANDA)	Coordinates the implementation of policies to protect children's and adolescents' rights, including the National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Working Adolescents. Led by MJSP's Special Secretariat for Human Rights. (80) In 2021, designated, within its scope, the members of the Monitoring and Evaluation Commission; established the Organizing Committee of the XII National Conference on the Rights of Children and Adolescents and appointed its members; and approved amendments to article 22(4) of Resolution No. 217 of December 26, 2018, thus allowing a remaining tie to be decided by CONANDA's President casting a vote at the subsequent meeting. (81-84) In addition, held monthly meetings and elected civil society representatives. Its Adolescent Advisory Committee published a newsletter and hosted a virtual event in collaboration with SaferNet Brasil, a Brazilian NGO committed to online safety. (59) In May 2021, conducted events in support of the National Day to Combat Abuse and Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents. (59)
Labor Justice Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Working Adolescents	Coordinates efforts to eliminate child labor and ensure that adolescents have decent work opportunities. (85) Includes 11 representatives from the Superior Labor Court and regional labor courts. (86) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken by the council during the reporting period.
National Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons (CONATRAP)	Led by the National Secretariat for Justice within MJSP. Coordinates activities to address human trafficking and advises the Ministry on public policies related to human trafficking, including child trafficking. (42,87) Comprising seven voting members distributed among government and civil society. (42) In 2021, issued updates to its committee bylaws. (59)
Anti-Trafficking Coordination Centers ( Núcleos de Enfrentamento )	Coordinate activities to address human trafficking, including medical, legal, and psychological assistance, in 16 states and the Federal District. (88) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken by the Anti-Trafficking Coordination Centers during the reporting period.

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was established during the reporting period.

During the reporting period, the mayor of the municipality of Vila Velha, Espírito Santo, signed Decree No. 276 establishing a taskforce aimed at preventing and eradicating child labor. The taskforce comprises city officials and representatives of the judiciary. (12,89)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including insufficient funding and lack of implementation.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Working Adolescents III (2019–2022)	Prioritizes the prevention and eradication of child labor and the protection of adolescent workers; raises public awareness of child labor and its worst forms, including the risks of child labor; ensures relevant legislative compliance related to the prohibitions of child labor and its worst forms; strengthens family security and stability through the increase of employment opportunities; ensures access to quality education; and establishes health support systems for child labor victims. (90) In 2021, MPT published a manual on addressing some of the worst forms of child labor, including domestic work, street work, rural labor activities, drug trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation of children. The manual further includes concepts, data, and possible strategies to address these issues. (12,91)
National Plan to Combat Human Trafficking III (2018–2022)	Outlines the government's strategy to address human trafficking. Includes 58 objectives based on 6 themes: policy management, information management, training, accountability, victim assistance and prevention, and public awareness raising. (42,92) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the National Plan to Combat Human Trafficking during the reporting period.
Federal Pact for the Eradication of Forced Labor	Aims to establish a database on forced labor, create state-level commissions to address forced labor, and strengthen interagency coordination. Led by MJSP's Special Secretariat for Human Rights, and currently signed by 23 of the 27 states. (42,93,94) In 2021, the Pact was revised, allowing all 5,000 municipalities throughout the country to be included. Additionally, this revision aims to promote and improve communication between related entities involved in addressing matters related to the eradication of slave labor. (94,95)
National Education Plan (2014–2024)	Aims to expand access to education and improve the quality of education by allocating 10 percent of Brazil's gross domestic product to public education by 2024. (96) In 2021, the goal of increasing full-time school enrollment rose by 15 percent in high schools and 10 percent in elementary schools; however, over the past 7 years, only 5 out of the 20 goals of the National Education Policy have been partially achieved. (12,97) In addition, research found that frequent cuts to the national education budget affected the implementation of the National Education Plan. (97,98)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (99,100)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of programs to assist child victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
National Program to Eradicate Child Labor ( Programa de Erradicação do Trabalho Infantil [PETI] )†	Ministry of Citizenship (MOC) social assistance program that addresses child labor through awareness-raising activities, victim identification and protection, and conditional cash transfers. To receive program benefits, family participants must ensure that children are not working and maintain at least 85 percent school attendance. (101) According to the Ministry's Monitoring System of the Child Labor Eradication Program (SIMPETI), which tracks actions taken by state and municipal governments towards the five objectives in support of PETI, there were 12,756 activities carried out nationwide to address child labor during the reporting period. The state of Pernambuco led the effort with 554 actions through its Department of Social Development, Children, and Youth, allocating $150,000 for the execution of strategic actions in support of PETI, including technical assistance and monitoring of actions carried out by social assistance teams. (12)
Aid Brazil ( Auxílio Brasil )*‡	MOC cash transfer program that integrates various public policies addressing social assistance, health, education, employment, and income. Aimed at families living in poverty and extreme poverty throughout the country. (102) Established in November 2021, the new program replaces the pre-existing Family Stipend ( Bolsa Família ) program, increasing the amounts paid to vulnerable families and incorporating all families previously enrolled in the Bolsa Família program. The government also aims to expand eligibility to increase the recipients from 14.6 million to 17.5 million by January 2022. (12)
Specialized Social Assistance Reference Centers†	MOC program that provides vulnerable populations, including victims of child labor and commercial sexual exploitation, with psychological, social, and legal services. (103) The centers continued to provide services during the reporting period. (104)

Program	Description
South-South Cooperation Projects†	Government of Brazil-funded projects implemented by ILO to address child labor and promote South-South cooperation. (105) In 2021, ILO and other Brazilian institutions launched the "Consolidation of the Progress of the Latin America and Caribbean Regional Initiative Free of Child Labor" project, which aims to address child labor in the region by 2025 and seeks to share the Brazilian experience through data generation, labor inspection, and local coordination to implement national policies to address child labor. The launch event was attended by more than 40 representatives, including MOC, MTP, the Brazilian Institute of Geography and Statistics, and regional partners. (12)
National Flow of Assistance to Victims of Slave Labor‡	Creates an integrated network of social services providers and standardizes assistance to victims of slave labor across the country. It is structured into three stages: complaint and planning, rescue and reintegration, and the identification of organizations mandated to act at each stage, including their role detail. (106) Led by the Ministry for Women, Family, and Human Rights (MMFDH). (107) In October 2021, MMFDH published Ordinance No. 3.484, which ensured national implementation of the National Flow of Assistance to Slave Labor Victims. In addition, MMFDH trained service providers on its implementation during the reporting period. (106)
USDOL-Funded Projects	Cooperation on Fair, Free, Equitable Employment (COFFEE), a $2.2 million project implemented by Verité in Brazil, Colombia, and Mexico to develop tools for businesses to establish systems to prevent, detect, and address child and forced labor in coffee supply chains. Measurement, Awareness-Raising, and Policy Engagement (MAPI6) Project on Child Labor and Forced Labor, a global project with a $225,000 component in Brazil that supported a National Forced Labor Survey. (108,109) As of the publication of this report, the results of the survey have not yet been published. For additional information, please see our website.

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Brazil.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (110-114)

The Ministry of Women, Family and Human Rights manages a human rights hotline that directs child labor, child trafficking, and child sexual exploitation complaints to relevant institutions. (12) In 2021, the hotline received 2,492 reports of potential child labor cases and 353 reports of 602 potential forced labor violations involving both children and adults. Data related to child labor complaints were as follows: 73 in rural areas, 836 in domestic service, 509 in commercial or industrial settings, and 1,161 in the informal sector. (12)

Because PETI is decentralized, municipal governments are responsible for implementation and monitoring, and must report back to state and federal governments. Challenges include responding to the needs of program participants, complex local contexts and geographic areas, excessive program requirements, and high staff turnover. (115) In addition, many states reported a lack of resources to adequately assist, identify, refer, and support child trafficking victims, and many did not have specialized shelters for child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. (34)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Brazil (Table 11).

Although research found no evidence that child labor exists in the British Virgin Islands, in 2021, the government made no advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. There is no list of hazardous work prohibited for children in the British Virgin Islands, nor does the law prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs. In addition, the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor exists in the British Virgin Islands. (1) Table 1 provides one key indicator on children's education in the British Virgin Islands. (2)

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Primary Completion Rate (%)		98.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2020, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2022. (2)

The cost of uniforms, books, and lunches prevents some children from attending school. In addition, violence in schools can deter children from attending. (2,3) Children not in school may be vulnerable to engage in child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

British Overseas Territories recognize the jurisdiction and sovereignty of the United Kingdom (UK) but are not constitutionally part of the UK. They are self-governing, except in the areas of foreign affairs and defense. (4) Domestic UK law does not generally apply unless explicitly extended to the British Virgin Islands. Under Article 35(4) of the ILO Constitution, when the UK ratifies a Convention, the Territory must consider if it will accept the Convention. If the Convention is accepted, it is considered applicable to that Territory. (4) The following Convention has been extended to and accepted by the British Virgin Islands (Table 2).

Table 2. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government of the British Virgin Islands has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 3). However, gaps exist in the British Virgin Islands' legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including failure to criminalize the use of children in illicit activities.

Table 3. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Articles 3 and 128 of the Labor Code (5)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 3 and 130 of the Labor Code (5)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	No		Articles 130 and 146 of the Labor Code (5)

British Virgin Islands

NO ADVANCEMENT

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 130 of the Labor Code; Article 14 of the Constitution Order; Section 201A of the Criminal Code (5-7)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Section 201A of the Criminal Code (7)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Sections 127, 201A and 284A of the Criminal Code; Article 130 of the Labor Code (5,7)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No		Articles 3 and 130 of the Criminal Code (7)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	N/A†
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	N/A*†
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	17	Section 2b of the Education Amendment Act of 2014; Division 3, Paragraph 28 of the Education Act (8,9)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 22 of the Constitution Order; Section 17 of the Education Act (6,8)

* Country has no conscription (10)

† Country has no standing military (10)

In the British Virgin Islands, the Labor Code specifies that hazardous work be defined by the Minister of Labor, but the Minister of Labor has not defined hazardous work for children or light work that may be engaged in by children who are at least 14. (4,11) There is also no criminal prohibition against using children in illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs. Additionally, the laws prohibiting the commercial sexual exploitation of children do not meet international standards as they do not cover girls ages 16-17 or boys. (7) The minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, which may encourage children to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. (5,8,9)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms. However, the British Virgin Islands have established an institutional mechanism for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 4).

Table 4. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor	Enforce labor laws and collects data and statistics on violations of the Labor Code. (5)

In the British Virgin Islands, the Ministry of Labor proactively plans and conducts labor inspections. There is one labor inspector who assesses penalties for labor law violations. (11,12) The labor inspector may assess penalties for labor law violations during the initial inspection and is permitted to conduct unannounced inspections. The existence of only one labor inspector is a barrier to uncovering additional violations; however, the British Virgin Islands make the most use of their single labor inspector by conducting annual inspections on newly established businesses and worksites and those reported by employees or other stakeholders for possible violations. (11)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor. However, the Government of the British Virgin Islands has established child protection programs promoting children's rights, which may contribute to the prevention of child labor. (13)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the continued prevention of child labor in the British Virgin Islands (Table 5).

Table 5. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify international conventions on child labor.	2020 – 2021
	Determine the types of hazardous work prohibited for children, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations.	2012 – 2021
	Ensure that the commercial sexual exploitation of girls ages 16-17 and boys is criminally prohibited.	2021
	Ensure that the use of children in illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs, is criminally prohibited.	2015 – 2021
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under age 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016 – 2021
	Raise the minimum age for work to the age up to which education is compulsory.	2018 – 2021
Social Programs	Ensure that all children can attend school by eliminating prohibitive school costs and violence in schools.	2018 – 2021

In 2021, Burkina Faso made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government developed an implementation plan for the National Strategy to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor for the period of 2022 to 2023.

It also signed a memorandum of understanding with Nigeria to address human trafficking and completed a national child labor survey. However, children in Burkina Faso are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in farming and commercial sexual exploitation, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in artisanal gold mining. The Labor Code does not identify the activities in which children may engage in light work. The government also lacked resources for the enforcement of child labor laws and did not release information on its labor and criminal law enforcement efforts.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Burkina Faso are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in farming and commercial sexual exploitation, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in artisanal gold mining. (1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Burkina Faso. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Forced begging in unregistered, and thus illegal, Koranic schools (1,2,16)
	Recruitment by non-state armed groups for use in armed conflict (19)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Burkina Faso is a destination, transit point, and source for child trafficking to and from other West African countries. Child trafficking also occurs within Burkina Faso. (1,2,20) Children engage in artisanal gold mining, which is particularly arduous and often exposes children to dangerous chemicals such as cyanide and mercury used in the gold extraction process. (2,7,12,21) Burkina Faso is also one of the largest producers of cotton in Africa, with a reported 250,000 children involved in growing the crop, primarily on small family farms. (9,22) Children working in the cotton sector are exposed to many health risks, including exposure to pesticides, injury from the use of sharp tools, animal bites, and respiratory issues. (6,12)

During the reporting period, children were used as soldiers by extremist armed groups. Research indicates that a village attack in 2021, Burkina Faso's deadliest terrorist attack in years, which killed at least 132, was carried out mostly by children under the age of 14. (19) In addition, a military coup in January 2022 and continued insecurity has led to the mass displacement of over 1.4 million IDPs in the last 3 years, including a large number of vulnerable children. (1,11,12,23)

Although the Law Orienting the Education System mandates free education until age 16, many children face barriers to education access. (3,11,24,25) Due to a lack of infrastructure, some communities create makeshift structures to serve as schools, and in rural areas, teacher shortages are common, especially in post-primary levels. In addition, there are fees for all levels of public education, which sometimes pose heavy burdens on families. (3,11) Moreover, school violence exists and is exacerbated by the current security crisis, and transportation costs restrict access to schooling in urban areas. (11)

Children in Burkina Faso must have birth documentation (a birth certificate or supplemental birth judgment) to register for school. (11,26) A student may begin schooling without documentation, but documentation must be provided before the end of the first quarter following the child’s registration. (3,11) Because more than one in five children do not have a birth certificate, many children in Burkina Faso remain out of school and vulnerable to child labor. (11) While research has found no evidence of discrimination based on ethnicity, refugees and IDPs face many education challenges, mainly due to the sudden increase in education needs in the communities hosting them. Less than 20 percent of displaced people manage to obtain school registration. (11) In some localities where armed attacks on schools have intensified, especially in the East and Sahel regions, there is a preference of some communities for other types of education such as Koranic schools. (11)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Burkina Faso has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Burkina Faso's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including unspecified light work provisions.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 152 of the Labor Code; Order Deviating the Age of Admission to Employment (27,28)

Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Article 153 of the Labor Code; Articles 3–6 of the Hazardous Work List; Article 77 of the Mining Code (27,29,30)

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 4 of the Law Orienting the Education System (25)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 6 of the Law Orienting the Education System (25)

* Country has no conscription (34)

The light work provisions in the Labor Code are not sufficiently specific to prevent children from involvement in child labor because activities that qualify as light work that may be permitted are not identified in legislation. (27,28)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of child labor laws.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Social Security (MFPTSS)	Enforces labor laws, including child labor laws and laws on the worst forms of child labor; and establishes a government policy to address child labor. (35)
Ministry of Women, National Solidarity, Family, and Humanitarian Action (MFSNF)	Removes children from exploitative child labor; provides reintegration services through its mobile unit for intervention, and works with local village surveillance committees on awareness-raising efforts through participation in joint routine inspections with MFPTSS, the lead agency on child labor law enforcement. (12,36) Operates a free hotline to report child abuse, and maintains civil registry offices in maternity wards to register newborn babies. Enlists its National Council for Childhood to oversee all policies aimed at the survival, protection, development, and participation of children in broader policy initiatives. (37) It is unknown how many cases of child labor are identified as a result of complaints made to the MFSNF hotline.
Ministry of Territorial Administration, Decentralization, and Interior Security (MATDSI)	Through its Morals Brigade in the MATDSI National Police Force, oversees criminal cases involving children and women, which are referred to the Ministry of Justice for prosecution. Assists MFPTSS by participating in joint routine inspections related to child labor in suspected human trafficking cases. (12,36)
Ministry of Justice	Appoints one or more judges who specialize in child protection issues to each high court to oversee juvenile court cases. Collaborates with MFSNF social workers in charge of child protection to conduct investigations on behalf of vulnerable children, including victims of child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, exploitative child labor, and begging. (12,38)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Burkina Faso took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Social Security that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including a lack of human resources.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2020	2021

The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Burkina Faso's workforce, which includes over 8.5 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Burkina Faso would need to employ about 213 labor inspectors. (39) Research indicates that the labor inspectorate lacks adequate resources to enforce labor laws throughout the country, including the human and financial resources needed to carry out a sufficient number of preliminary labor inspections and follow-up inspections. (20,40) The government did not provide information on its labor law enforcement efforts for inclusion in this report. (3) However, labor inspectors received training on the National Strategy to End the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2019–2023) (SN/PFTE), its Plan of Operational Action 2019–2021, and on general child labor issues during the year. (3)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Burkina Faso took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including inconsistent application of victim identification and referral procedures by authorities and frontline responders.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Unknown (11)	Unknown (3)

Imposed Penalties for Violations Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Unknown (11)	Unknown (3)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Unknown (11)	Unknown (3)

During the reporting period, law enforcement agents and social workers received training on addressing trafficking in persons as a part of the Tripartite Cooperation Agreement for the Protection of Children on the Move or Victims of Cross-Border Trafficking between the Governments of Benin, Burkina Faso, and Togo. (42) In addition, during the reporting period, 18 children who were potential victims of child trafficking were intercepted in Burkina Faso. (3,42)

Although the government has standard victim identification and referral procedures, criminal law enforcement authorities and frontline responders do not apply them uniformly. (2,20) The government did not provide information on its criminal law enforcement efforts for inclusion in this report. (11)

Research has found isolated cases of children being apprehended by the government during anti-terrorism sweeps, and has determined that in the current system, children are often treated as perpetrators. Research indicates that children suspected of terrorist activity are being held in prison along with adults, with some children being held for years. (43)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including insufficient coordination among ministries.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Coordination Committee for the National Strategy Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (CNC-SN/PFTE)	Defines appropriate strategies for mobilizing the resources necessary to implement the SN/PFTE. Created in July 2020 by order of the Minister of Labor, comprises representatives from other ministries, civil society organizations, NGOs, unions, and employers. (3,11) Promotes consultation and synergy of action between the actors involved in SN/PFTE implementation. Validates the annual activity programs of SN/PFTE. (11) Monitors and evaluates the implementation and proposes necessary readjustments. Reviews and adopts the reports submitted to it by the Technical Secretariat. (11) Issues reasoned opinions on any question relating to the worst forms of child labor. (11) During the reporting period, the National Coordination Committee developed a new operational plan for the National Strategy to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor for the period of 2022 to 2023. (3)
MFPTSS Directorate to Combat Child Labor and its Worst Forms	Coordinates and leads interagency efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms; collects information on child labor; and conducts awareness-raising activities. Serves as the Secretariat for CNC-SN/PFTE. (44) Research was unable to determine whether the Directorate was active during the reporting period.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for Vigilance and Surveillance Against the Trafficking in Persons and Assimilated Practices (CNVS)	Coordinates actions at the national level to address the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking, and oversees Committees for Vigilance and Surveillance in each of the regions. MFSNF serves as the lead agency, with MATDSI playing a secondary role; includes representatives from MFPTSS, MFSNF, and NGOs. (1,12,16) Research was unable to determine whether CNVS was active during the reporting period.
Child Protection Networks	Assist CNVS with bringing together state and non-state actors and coordinating and facilitating the collection of statistical data on human trafficking, specifically the trafficking of women and children. (11) Established by MFSNF, the networks comprise social workers, magistrates, judges, police officers, health workers, and NGOs in 23 of the country's 45 provinces. Research was unable to determine whether the Child Protection Networks were active during the reporting period.
Cooperation Agreements with other countries	Aim to address cross-border trafficking in children. (1) Research was unable to determine whether cooperation agreements with other countries were active during the reporting period.
Parliamentary Network for the Promotion of Child Rights	Trains government officials on children's rights, including child labor laws and other issues affecting children. (45) Research was unable to determine whether the Parliamentary Network for the Promotion of Child Rights was active during the reporting period.

During the reporting period, Burkina Faso and Nigeria signed an MOU to fight trafficking in persons, which consists of 18 articles and addresses identification, prosecution, repatriation, as well as rehabilitation and reintegration of victims, among other issues. (3,42)

The National Coordination Committee for the National Strategy Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (CNC-SN/PFTE) is made up of representatives from the various ministries responsible for the fight against the worst forms of child labor, representatives from civil society organizations working in the protection of children's rights, social partners (workers' unions and employers), and NGOs. (11) However, all mechanisms suffer from poor coordination among ministries and a lack of resources, such as computers and electricity, which continued to hamper the government's ability to coordinate efforts to fully address child trafficking. (3,21,40)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including a lack of implementation of policies related to child labor.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy to End the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2019–2023) (SN/PFTE)	Aims to monitor, address, prevent, and protect against the worst forms of child labor in Burkina Faso, and to reintegrate victims. (1,3) Developed by law enforcement agencies focused on child labor and its worst forms; governmental and non-governmental bodies; technical, financial, and social partners; and civil society organizations, including children's associations. (11) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the SN/PFTE during the reporting period.
National Child Protection Strategy (2020–2023)	Aims to strengthen the institutional, community, and family environment to ensure effective protection for children. (26) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the National Child Protection Strategy during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
MFSNF Projects to Combat Human Trafficking†	Aim to address human trafficking. Include the operation of transit centers that provide food, medical assistance, and counseling to child trafficking survivors and children vulnerable to trafficking. (2,46) Transit centers aim to reintegrate victims into their communities and facilitate repatriation of foreign victims when possible. (2) The National Parenting Program assists parents in providing access to education and raising awareness about child trafficking. Nationwide media campaigns to address human trafficking provide advocacy, raise awareness, and build capacity for key actors involved in child protection issues, including child trafficking. (2) Watchdog and monitoring committees ensure that all cases of alleged trafficking of children are reported to the justice system by social workers. (47) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the MFNSF Projects to Combat Human Trafficking during the reporting period.
Campaign to Remove Street Children	NGO MinWomen-funded program, with coordination by the MFSNF, and includes outreach missions in the streets to identify and refer vulnerable children, including forced begging victims, to one of the four youth shelters established in the Somgandé, Baskuy, Nongremassom, and Cissin districts of Ouagadougou. (20,40) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the Campaign to Remove Street Children during the reporting period.
ILO-Implemented Projects to Combat Child Labor	Project to address child labor and forced labor in supply chains, implemented by ILO in collaboration with the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO). Includes Eliminating Child Labor and Forced Labor in the Cotton, Textile and Garment Value Chains: an Integrated Approach (2018–2022), a EUR 9 million EU and ILO initiative of the UN-funded global project to combat child labor and forced labor in cotton and textile supply chains. (48) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the Eliminating Child Labor and Forced Labor in the Cotton, Textile and Garment Value Chains: an Integrated Approach project during the reporting period.
World Bank-Funded Projects	Include a $51 million Education Access and Quality Improvement Project to support the government in increasing access to preschool education in the two poorest regions and to secondary education in the five poorest regions, and to improve teaching and education; and a $50 million Social Safety Net Project to provide income support to poor households and lay the foundation for a basic safety net system in Burkina Faso. (49,50) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement World Bank-Funded Projects during the reporting period.
Measurement, Awareness-Raising, and Policy Engagement (MAP 16) Project on Child Labor and Forced Labor (2019–2021)	USDOL-funded global project implemented by ILO to support global and national efforts aimed at countering child labor and the forced labor of adults and children. Includes the Measurement, Awareness-Raising, and Policy Engagement (MAP 16) Project on Child Labor and Forced Labor (2019–2021), a $170,000 program. (51) Additional information is available on the USDOL website.

† Program is funded by the Government of Burkina Faso.

In 2021, the Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Social Security completed a national child labor survey, though the results were not published. (3)

Although Burkina Faso has social programs to address the worst forms of child labor in cotton production and gold mining, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. (2)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Burkina Faso (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws determine the activities in which light work may be permitted.	2016 – 2021
Enforcement	Ensure that labor law enforcement receives sufficient human and financial resources to fulfill its mandates, including hiring enough labor inspectors to meet ILO recommendations, conducting an adequate number of inspections, and following up after preliminary inspections to ensure remediation of notices to comply with labor law obligations.	2009 – 2021
	Publish statistics on labor law enforcement efforts, including the labor inspectorate's funding, number of labor inspectors employed, number and type of labor inspections conducted, the number of child labor violations found, the number of penalties imposed and collected, number of inspections conducted at worksites, the number of targeted and routine inspections, and whether unannounced inspections were conducted.	2009 – 2021

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

In 2021, Burma is receiving an assessment of no advancement. On February 1, 2021, Burma's military launched a coup and seized control of the state from the democratically elected civilian government. The return of a military regime and the resulting instability severely impacted the ability of Burma to fully engage in addressing the worst forms of child labor throughout the country. Burma is assessed as having made no advancement because it demonstrated a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than isolated incidents. The national military continued to force civilians, including children, to work in non-combat roles as porters, cleaners, cooks, and agricultural laborers in conflict areas, including Rakhine, during the reporting period. While Burma took at least one step to address child labor—the drafting of a hazardous work list for children—the list was not published during the reporting period. Children in Burma are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in the forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict and in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The vulnerability of Rohingya children to the worst forms of child labor remained high as many continued to be denied access to education and livelihoods because of restrictions on their movements imposed by the regime. Penalties for recruitment and use of children by the military, or for the military's use of civilian populations for forced labor, are also not sufficient for the seriousness of the crime. In addition, the regime did not publicly release information on its labor law enforcement efforts.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Burma are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in the forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict and in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1,2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Burma.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	0.4 (39,370)
Attending School (%)*	5 to 14	95.3
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	0.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		95.4

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2018, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2022. (3)

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization's analysis of statistics from Labour Force Survey (LFS), 2019. (4)

* School attendance is dramatically lower post-COVID-19 pandemic and after the February 1, 2021 coup. Exact percentages are unknown, as many parents refuse to enroll their children in regime-controlled schools and many teachers joined the Civil Disobedience Movement and refuse to teach in schools controlled by the regime. (5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2,7,9,20)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

The military staged a coup on February 1, 2021, which resulted in limited oversight and reporting on child labor issues in Burma during the reporting year. (1) The regime banned most trade unions and failed to conduct regular labor inspections. (1,23) In addition, the Myanmar Police Force Anti-Trafficking in Persons Division largely ceased its enforcement work after February 1, which collectively contributed to underreporting of child trafficking and forced labor. (1)

The national military's "self-reliance" policy, which requires military forces to provide their own food and labor from local communities, has led to some units, reportedly including the Border Guard Police, to use civilians, including children, to porter goods, cook, and clean barracks in conflict areas. (2,20,21,24) In 2021, research indicated that children continued to be used by the national military in non-combat roles. (1,2,8,19,24,25) After the coup, the military often forced civilians, reportedly including children, to work in non-combatant roles as porters, cleaners, and cooks in both conflict and non-conflict areas. While clearing Yangon and other major urban areas of protests in March and April, for instance, the military and police often forced civilians—sometimes at gunpoint and with threat of detention—to remove barricades and other defensive barriers erected in neighborhoods. (1) Local media reported in December 2021 that the military had begun to force military members' children, some as young as age 12, to participate in mandatory military training, including training with weapons. (1)

After the coup, the military and the regime's Ministry of Defense ceased cooperation with the UN Country Task Force for Monitoring and Reporting (UNCTFMR) on activities to end child use and recruitment. In the UN Annual Report on Children and Armed Conflict, the UN Secretary General on June 21 re-listed the Myanmar military as an entity that recruits child soldiers, alongside seven ethnic armed groups in Myanmar, including the Karen National Liberation Army, United Wa State Army, Democratic Karen Benevolent Army (DKBA), Kachin Independence Army, Karenni Army, Karen National Liberation Army Peace Council, and the Restoration Council of Shan State/Shan State Army. (1,18,24-26) In the past, civilian brokers with military connections have sometimes facilitated entry of underage recruits into the military, in some instances bypassing standard age verification procedures by producing sophisticated counterfeit identity documents. (2,7,20,24) There were reports of 719 cases of use and recruitment of children for combat and non-combat roles by other armed actors in Burma in 2021, including by the military, ethnic armed organizations, and pro-democracy people's defense force groups. (1,25) However, according to UNCTFMR, the vast majority of reported cases of underage military recruitment for combat roles occurred in previous years and not in 2021. (1) The DKBA signed a joint action plan to end recruitment and use of children in armed conflict with the UN CTFMR in November 2020. (27) Efforts to enforce the joint action plan ceased after the military coup. (10)

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

Moreover, in early 2022, the ILO established a new Commission of Inquiry on Burma due to escalation of large-scale lethal violence against civilians, including children. (28) Research showed that in December 2021 at least 35 people in Kayah State, 2 of whom were Save the Children staff, were killed and their bodies torched. UNICEF also reported that three children were abducted from their homes in Kayah State, and their bodies and another child's body were later found in a toilet pit of an IDP camp. (28)

Child victims, particularly girls, are trafficked both domestically and to other countries for commercial sexual exploitation. (1,25,29) Research found that Burmese girls were trafficked to Burma's border with China for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation. (1,20,24)

The Ministry of Labor, Immigration, and Population (MOLIP) collected data for a survey in 2019 to help develop and establish a database that accurately reflects the current size and composition of the labor force in Burma—including information on child labor—but it has yet to be published. (9,30,31)

Since August 2017, an estimated 884,000 people, primarily from the Rohingya minority, have fled from Burma to Bangladesh following acts of violence and ethnic cleansing perpetuated by the military in northern Rakhine State. (21,32-37) As a result, over 450,000 Rohingya refugees are children who live in refugee camps in Bangladesh at sites in which they lack access to education, making them vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. (7,9,33,37-41) Rohingya girls are trafficked from refugee camps, in some cases being promised jobs in domestic work, for commercial sexual exploitation in Bangladesh, India, and Nepal. (16,21,42) Research also found that increasing numbers of children, particularly girls, are leaving camps for refugee and internally displaced people (IDP) to immigrate to countries such as Malaysia for marriages, but often find themselves in situations of forced labor, including domestic work, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (16,20,35,43,44) Rohingya children recruited to work outside the refugee camps, such as in shops, fishing, and transportation, are reported to be underpaid or unpaid, unable to communicate with their families, and subjected to excessive working hours. (43)

Approximately 130,000 Rohingya were forced to reside in IDP camps in Rakhine State after being internally displaced by ethnic violence within the State. Rohingya children residing in IDP camps are at an increased risk of the worst forms of child labor, including forced labor and sex trafficking, due to lack of schools particularly in IDP camps, movement restrictions, discriminatory policies and practices, and school closures due to ongoing violence, especially in Muslim villages. (2,20,24,33,35,45,46)

Rohingya children throughout Rakhine State continue to face severe restrictions on attending school due to discriminatory government policies and practices adopted following the 2012 riots and violent clashes between ethnic Rakhine and Rohingya communities. (47) Local officials and school authorities typically ban Rohingya children from attending government schools with ethnic Rakhine children. (47,48) In addition, Burmese law guarantees education only for Burmese citizens, and citizenship rates in Rohingya communities are extremely low. (45) Many Rohingya children also lack the documentation that is required to attend middle schools and high schools in Rakhine State because the government denies them citizenship or officials refuse to register their household residency. (9,19,49) Since 2018, the government has forced over 13,000 Rohingya to accept National Verification Cards (NVC) in Rakhine State, including over 500 children; the NVC is required to begin the process of applying for citizenship and requires Rohingya to accept a concession of foreignness. Of the few Rohingya who do obtain citizenship, they are rarely granted full citizenship; they are instead relegated to naturalized citizenship and are not afforded full rights like those granted to full citizens. (19,21,24,45,50)

Furthermore, schools in Rohingya villages impacted by the violence that occurred in 2017 have not reopened, and it is expected that dozens of schools for ethnic Rakhine children will remain closed due to continued fighting between the national military and non-state armed groups in the area. (45)

In addition to Rakhine State, children throughout Burma face barriers to education, such as costs associated with travel to schools located long distances away (especially when located in a different township than their own), a lack of schools and teachers, and expenses that include uniforms, books, transportation, and "extra fees" charged by teachers and schools. This leads many children to discontinue their studies after primary school, increasing their vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor. (1,12,16,24,51,52) Refugee children and children from ethnic communities who speak different languages often face barriers in schools because the curriculum is taught in Burmese, despite there being no law explicitly requiring Burmese language instruction. (1,16,24,51) When the regime mandated that school re-open in November 2021, it was reported that both students and teachers largely refused to attend. (1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Burma has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The regime has laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Burma's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including criminally prohibiting child trafficking consistent with international standards and comprehensively identifying the types of hazardous work prohibited for children.

Free Public Education	Yes		Chapter XIII, Section 46(b) of the Child Rights Law; Section 4(j) of the National Education Law (55,61)

* Country has no conscription

‡ Age calculated based on available information (62,63)

According to the Defense Services Act, persons under the age of 18 are prohibited from joining the armed forces. The regime has not taken actions to enforce this law during the reporting period. (1)

MOLIP has prepared a draft hazardous work list and worked to finalize the implementing regulation for the Child Rights Law (2019), but the regime has yet to release it. (1,9,20,49,51,55,64) In addition, two 2019 draft laws dealing with child labor issues in domestic work and the Occupational Safety and Health Bill, which seeks to expand the legal jurisdiction of the labor inspectorate to include additional industries, remained pending in 2021. (7,9,16,30,65-67)

Furthermore, the draft anti-trafficking in persons law, which will remove the requirement to demonstrate force, fraud, or coercion to constitute a child trafficking offense and allow for assets and proceeds found during trafficking in persons cases to be seized, was still awaiting approval. (2,7,20,51,68)

Burmese education law and policies provide that school is required for children through age 10; however, the minimum age for work is 14. (63,64) This does not meet international standards because the compulsory schooling age is lower than the minimum work age.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The regime has institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor — Factories and General Labor Laws Inspection Department (FGLLID)*	During the reporting year, the Ministry of Labor, Immigration, and Population was broken up and the Ministry of Labor is now a standalone ministry. (1,10) Inspects factories, shops, and establishments for child labor law violations. (53,54) Only mandated to inspect for child labor in manufacturing establishments and factories as laid out in the Factories Law (1951) and the Shops and Establishment Law (2016). This leaves certain sectors, including agriculture, construction, mining, and fishing in which child labor is reported to occur, outside of the purview of the FGLLID. (20,24,51)
Ministry of Home Affairs (MOHA) – Myanmar Police Force (MPF), Anti-Trafficking in Persons Division (ATIPD)	Investigates trafficking in persons crimes and engages in human trafficking prevention efforts through its 60 regional Anti-Trafficking Task Force police units. (7,20,51,69) Oversees nine specialized Child Protection Units in Rangoon, Mandalay, and Nay Pyi Daw to address child exploitation cases, including child trafficking, and uses formal written procedures with questions to screen victims. (20,25,69) Staffed by 476 personnel and operates nine 24/7 hotlines dedicated to reporting human trafficking cases. (7,10,20) During the reporting period, only a handful of cases were reported and the status of these cases is unknown. Information on trafficking in persons crimes is underreported as a result of the military coup. (10)

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Defense— Committee for the Prevention of Military Recruitment of Underage Children	Sanctions perpetrators that recruit or use children in the armed forces. (51,70)
Ministry of Legal Affairs	Previously named the Union Attorney General's Office. (1) Responsible for prosecuting trafficking in persons (TIP) crimes. TIP Coordinators act as district-level TIP focal points, helping to build prosecutorial expertise, collect and report data, support coordination between prosecutors and police, create focused TIP training opportunities, and improve TIP prosecution records throughout the country. (20,51) During the reporting period, the Ministry of Legal Affairs did not publish comprehensive data on trafficking in persons prosecutions. (10)

* Agency responsible for child labor enforcement was created during the reporting period.

The Myanmar Police Force (MPF) remained hampered by personnel turnover, resource constraints, and limited training, which resulted in areas of the country continuing to lack sufficient coverage. (2,7,9,20) Non-specialized police were sometimes unaware of how to pursue human trafficking investigations without the assistance of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Division's (ATIPD) Anti-Trafficking Task Force units, possibly resulting in some human trafficking victims being turned away when attempting to report their cases. (2,20)

Labor Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether labor law enforcement agencies in Burma took actions to address child labor.

In the post-coup environment, the regime did not release information on labor law enforcement for the reporting period. (1) The regime also has no functional complaint mechanisms for people to report use and recruitment of child soldiers or forced labor. (25)

In 2021, it was reported that the number of inspectors decreased during the reporting period as many inspectors joined the pro-democracy Civil Disobedience Movement and refused to work for the regime. (1,10) In addition, trainings for labor inspectors were halted and the number of labor inspections conducted declined sharply due to pandemic-related restrictions on movement put in place by the regime. Due to these restrictions, labor inspections were geographically limited to Burma's major urban centers, including Yangon, Mandalay, and Nay Pyi Taw. (5,51)

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

It was reported that the Ministry of Labor no longer conducts regular inspections, and when inspections do occur, the inspectors regularly side with management or the regime in disputes. (1) Despite labor inspectors having the authority to conduct unannounced inspections, these do not occur regularly; when they do occur, factory owners are often given advanced notice, and labor inspectors often neglect to speak with workers. (9,21,51) In addition, only the Ministry of Labor has the power to pursue legal actions and impose penalties. And even on the rare occasion that penalties are imposed, they are too low to act as a disincentive for most medium to large enterprises. (1)

The regime did not provide any information on labor law enforcement efforts during the reporting year. (1)

Research found that funding for the labor inspectorate is insufficient to cover transportation and equipment for labor inspectors, which discourages inspections of remote establishments. Furthermore, when a complaint is filed by a worker, inspections often are not conducted in a timely manner. (9,51) Due to capacity and resource constraints, the Factories and General Labor Laws Inspection Department (FGLLID) has limited data on its own labor market, including the number of factories, and a lack of basic resources such as furniture for labor inspector offices. (9)

The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Burma's workforce, which includes approximately 22 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Burma would employ about 554 inspectors. (51,71-73)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Burma took limited actions to address the worst forms of child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the authority of the MPF that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including failure to investigate or prosecute officials who accept bribes.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Yes (51)	Unknown (1)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Yes (51)	Unknown (1)
Refresher Courses Provided	Yes (51)	Unknown (1)
Number of Investigations	Unknown (51)	5 (1)
Number of Violations Found	39 (51)	5 (1)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown (51)	5 (1)
Number of Convictions	Unknown (51)	Unknown (1)
Imposed Penalties for Violations Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Yes (51)	Unknown (1)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (51)	Unknown (1)

In 2021, the ATIPD reported five cases involving child labor. One investigation involved the forced labor of a 16-year-old boy on a fishing vessel. (1) The four other cases involved child trafficking with indicators of sex or labor exploitation. Two of the cases involved forced prostitution and two cases involved forced marriage to men in China. (1) All five cases were referred to the Ministry of Legal Affairs for prosecution, but the status of each trial is unknown. (1)

While the government continued training its personnel on age verification at recruitment centers, insufficient access to identity documents and security issues continued to present challenges to the full prevention of the recruitment of children. (21) While the national military has taken action against national military officials for these crimes, the penalties imposed on members of the military for recruiting and using child soldiers are not commensurate with the seriousness of these crimes. (2,8,21) In past years, most of these cases reportedly culminated in reprimands, demotions, relocations, fines, or decreases in pensions, penalties significantly less than those prescribed by criminal law, which mandates prison sentences. (2,9,21,24)

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

Research noted that some regime authorities and regime law enforcement officers allegedly participated in, facilitated, or profited from human trafficking. This included police officers and other regime officials accepting bribes, and in some cases, individuals claiming to have ties to high-level officials purportedly pressuring victims not to take legal action against their traffickers. (2,20)

The regime did not provide information on training for new criminal investigators or on the number of convictions and penalties imposed related to child labor during the reporting period. (1)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including lack of coordination among agencies.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for the Rights of the Child	Institutes policies, guidelines, and measures needed to implement the Child Rights Law of 2019. (55) Chaired by the Minister of Social Welfare, Relief, and Resettlement. Creates and oversees Local Committees for the Rights of the Child, which are mandated to submit progress reports on functions and duties concerning the implementation of the Child Rights Law. (55) In March 2021, the regime reconstituted the 40-member committee, though any substantive activities are unknown. (1)
Child Soldiers: UNCTFMR; Committee for the Prevention of Grave Violations Against Children in ACs; and National Committee on Implementation of Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Involvement of Children in AC	UN Country Task Force on Monitoring and Reporting (UNCTFMR) on Grave Violations Against Children: Coordinates with the government to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children in Burma's armed forces. (74) Operates a hotline for reporting cases of child soldiering. (20,25) Co-chaired by the UN and UNICEF, members include Save the Children, World Vision, and relevant UN agencies, such as ILO. Mandated by UN Security Council Resolution 1612 in response to children in Burma being subjected to grave violations, including the recruitment and use of children as soldiers. (9,74-76) Research was unable to determine whether this task force was active during the reporting period after the coup. (1,25) Committee for the Prevention of Grave Violations Against Children in Armed Conflicts (ACs): Formed in January 2019 and addresses issues directed at the national military within the annual UN Report on Children and Armed Conflict Annex related to the killing, maiming, and sexual assault of children in armed conflicts. (7,30) Members include 13 ministries. Established a complaint mechanism for Burmese citizens to report potential cases of any of the UN-defined "six grave violations" against children in armed conflict that are now prohibited under the 2019 Child Rights Law. (51) Research was unable to determine whether this committee was active during the reporting period. (1) National Committee on Implementation of Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict: Created by the civilian government in November 2020. (10) Implements legal and management measures to prevent the use and recruitment of children under the age of 18 by the military and builds awareness of this issue among the general population. (77) Chaired by the Minister for Social Welfare, Relief and Rehabilitation. (20,77) Has 16 members, including the Ministry of Defense, MOHA, Ministry of Health, Ministry of Information, and the Ministry of Legal Affairs. (20,77) Research was unable to determine whether this committee was active during the reporting period. (1)
Child Labor Coordination: National Committee on Child Labor Eradication; and Technical Working Group on Child Labor, and Forced Labor Committee	National Committee on Child Labor Eradication: Oversees the implementation of the Myanmar Child Labor Eradication Project. (12,15,78) Chaired by the Vice Chairman of State Administration Council and consists of 39 members including representatives from 13 government ministries, the chief ministers of 10 states, the mayors of Rangoon and Mandalay, unions, and employer and civil society organizations. (9,10,78) Held meetings during the reporting year during which the committee considered the report on child labor in 2020 and reviewed the national action policy and plan for eliminating child labor, but did not include international and labor representation in meetings. (1,10,79,80) Technical Working Group on Child Labor: Coordinates the implementation of ILO Convention 182, including drafting the list of hazardous work prohibited for children, developing a national plan of action against child labor, and establishing a mechanism for identifying, monitoring, and referring child labor cases. Chaired by the Ministry of Labor, Immigration, and Population (MOLIP), consists of stakeholders from eight government ministries, employers, and civil society organizations. (8,81) Research was unable to determine whether this committee was active during the reporting period. (1) Forced Labor Committee did not meet during the reporting year. (1)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Central Body for the Suppression of Trafficking in Persons	Coordinates efforts to address trafficking in persons. Chaired by the Minister of MOHA and previously included six government agencies and several NGOs. (5,7,20,51,70) Creates, implements, and maintains an annual work plan to make progress toward goals established in the Third 5-year National Plan of Action to Counter Trafficking in Persons (NPA). (7,20,82) Includes three working groups: (1) Prevention of Trafficking in Persons and Protection of Trafficked Victims, headed by the Deputy Minister of MOHA; (2) Legal Framework and Prosecuting Measures, headed by the Deputy Attorney General; and (3) Repatriation and Rehabilitation of Trafficked Victims, headed by the Deputy Minister of the Ministry of Social Welfare, Relief and Rehabilitation. (7,20) Research was unable to determine whether this committee was active during the reporting period. (1)
Township Committees of the Rights of the Child	Coordinate local child welfare and protection activities. Led by the Township Administrator and consist of government agencies, including the Department of Social Welfare, police, and NGOs. (12,62) Research was unable to determine whether these committees were active during the reporting period.

Research indicates that the regime government continues to be hampered by limited interministerial coordination, including communication, across all ministries. (7)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including the adoption of policies that address all relevant worst forms of child labor.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Myanmar Child Labor Eradication Project	Established a national plan of action to eliminate child labor, including hazardous child labor. (12) Ended in 2021. (10) Research was unable to determine specific activities undertaken during the reporting period to implement this policy.
Children in Armed Conflict: Joint Action Plan with the UN to Prevent the Recruitment and Use of Children for Military Purposes; and National Action Plan on Preventing Grievous Injuries and Sexual Abuse of Children in Armed Conflicts (2020–2021)	Joint Action Plan with the UN to Prevent the Recruitment and Use of Children for Military Purposes aims to end all recruitment and use of children in Burma's armed forces. Seeks to ensure the release of children under age 18 from the armed forces and facilitate their reintegration into families and communities through the UNCTFMR. (83) There are two action plans in Burma under implementation: Tatmadaw Kyi as of June 2012 and Democratic Karen Benevolent Army as of November 2020. (84) National Action Plan on Preventing Grievous Injuries and Sexual Abuse of Children in Armed Conflicts (2020–2021) is chaired by the Director-General of the Department of Rehabilitation, and a representative from the Department of Defense is the Deputy Chair. Responsible for verifying and monitoring that official government actions taken on complaints are handled according to official guidance. (20) Coordinated with government ministries and civil society organizations to establish annual work plans, and developed appropriate capacity building and awareness-raising campaigns related to prevention of the six grave violations against children in armed conflict. Issued annual report. (20)
Myanmar Sustainable Development Plan (2018–2030)	Sets out a strategy to expand the social safety net and social protection services, including the introduction of measures to keep children enrolled in schools and out of child labor. (85) Action Plan Item 4.3.6 specifically addresses eliminating child labor through education. (9,85) Research was unable to determine specific activities undertaken during the reporting period to implement this policy.
Myanmar Decent Work Country Program (2018–2021)	Seeks to strengthen protections against child labor and forced labor by building on existing ILO programs in Burma and continuing engagement between ILO and the government. (36,86) During the reporting period, the regime Ministry of Labor threatened to halt this program after ILO refused to accredit the regime at an annual ILO meeting. (10) Research was unable to determine specific activities undertaken during the reporting period to implement this policy.
Third 5-Year National Plan of Action (NPA) to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2017–2021)	Aims to effectively eliminate internal and cross-border trafficking in persons and to anticipate and forestall new forms of trafficking. (7,83) Third iteration of the NPA. Implemented by the Central Body for Suppression of Trafficking in Persons. (7,20) Employs three strategies, including: (1) prevent and suppress trafficking in persons; (2) protect all victims, in particular women and children; and (3) prevent forced labor of children, including in the recruitment of children into the armed forces, and prevent the sexual exploitation of children. (7,83) Research was unable to determine specific activities undertaken during the reporting period.

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

Although the government had previously adopted a policy to end the national military's recruitment and use of child soldiers and a policy on hazardous child labor, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor, including armed conflict by non-state armed groups, forced child labor, or commercial sexual exploitation of children.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of programs to address all worst forms of child labor.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
National Complaints Mechanism for Forced Labor (NCM)	Joint government-ILO program that gives citizens a permanent mechanism to lodge complaints of forced labor and seek remedies from the government; established in February 2020. (1,20,87) Includes the ability to report cases of child labor and child soldier recruitment. (51,88) After the coup, ceased updating statistics about number of complaints received. (1)
Department of Social Welfare	Responsible for the care of child labor survivors. (1) Leads efforts on repatriation, reintegration, and rehabilitation of TIP victims, and continued to lack a sufficient number of case managers to cover the entire country. There continued to be instances of delays in offering case management services, and the Department of Rehabilitation lacked sufficient human resources to provide reintegration support. (7,9,20) However, research has not found whether these resources are used by the regime. (1)
Hotlines	UNICEF and World Vision-operated hotlines for reporting suspected cases of child recruitment or use of children by Burma's military, which remain active. (89) UNICEF and World Vision reported that the number of calls received declined during the reporting period. (10)
USDOL-Funded Projects	Aim to increase awareness and knowledge of child labor; improve the legal and institutional environment to contribute to the elimination of child labor; improve availability and use of occupational safety and health data, and increase youth knowledge and awareness of the hazards and risks of child labor. Includes: the Myanmar Program on the Elimination of Child Labour (My-PEC) Project (2013–2022), a $7.75 million global project implemented by ILO, which concludes in December 2022; SafeYouth@Work Project: Building a Generation of Safe and Healthy Workers, a global project implemented by the ILO; and Measurement, Awareness-Raising, and Policy Engagement (MAPI6) Project on Child Labor and Forced Labor, a global project implemented by ILO. (1,9,90-92) For additional information, please see the USDOL website.

In 2021, in addition to the My-PEC program, funded by the U.S. Department of Labor; there were two other ILO Myanmar projects: Achieving Reduction of Child Labor in Support of Education: Program to reduce the worst forms of child labor in agriculture, funded by the Government of Japan, and the Asian Regional Child Labor Program (ARC), funded by the Foreign, Commonwealth and Development Office of the UK government. (93,94) The My-PEC project, while not working directly with the government after the military coup, continues to raise awareness of child labor; build capacity of civil society organizations and worker and employer organizations, and provide school and livelihood support through its current end date of December 2022. (90)

Although the government has a permanent National Complaints Mechanism (NCM) for Forced Labor, research found that there was no mechanism in place for the ILO to follow up on cases it referred to the NCM. (7,9,20,30,34,88,95) Additionally, research was unable to determine whether the mechanism was being adequately implemented due to the government's failure to communicate important developments to applicable stakeholders related to the NCM, including the publishing of NCM data online through MOLIP's website. (20,77,88) In addition, research found that even though the Ministry of Social Welfare, Relief and Rehabilitation has implemented a standard operating procedure for victim support and rehabilitation that includes rehabilitation and reintegration of former child soldiers, due to a lack of resources and understanding of victim reintegration and the decentralization of responsibility to state and regional authorities, the protection of victims and the ability to adequately prevent forced labor remain unaddressed. (24,51,88)

During the reporting year, the IOM continued to train local TIP services providers on the National Standard Operating Procedures (NSOP) on Return/Repatriation, Reintegration and Rehabilitation of Victims of Trafficking, training 70 community-based services providers on NSOP procedures. (1) Overall, the government lacks sufficient social programs to adequately address the worst forms of child labor, including forced child labor and the commercial sexual exploitation of children. (I)

In 2021, Burundi made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Burundi developed its first ever data management system to track human trafficking cases and passed a new migration law intended to permit official intervention in cases of international trafficking in persons. The government also established a permanent commission to coordinate anti-trafficking in persons efforts. However, children in Burundi are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in gold mining. Burundi lacks a compulsory education age that is equal to the minimum age for work, and the government failed to provide comprehensive criminal law enforcement data related to the worst forms of child labor. Other challenges remain, including a lack of resources to conduct labor inspections and criminal investigations; a lack of well-trained educators and poor infrastructure in the education sector; and insufficient social programs to address child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Burundi are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Forms of Child Labor†	Domestic work as a result of human trafficking (2,12,14)
	Forced labor in agriculture, mining, charcoal production, construction, fishing, street vending, and begging (1,2,7,12,14)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Burundi is one of the poorest countries in the world, with between 80 and 90 percent of its citizens engaged in agriculture, primarily subsistence and smallholder farming. Approximately 80 percent of the workforce is employed in the informal economy. (1,15-17) Poverty often results in Burundian children leaving school for paid work. (18) During the 2017–2018 school year alone, the cycle for which the most recent data are available, 171,652 children dropped out of school, with many believed to have entered domestic work. (19)

Burundi is a source country for children subjected to forced labor and sex trafficking abroad, and children are trafficked within the country from rural areas for domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation. (3,14) Reports indicate that an increasing number of children from the Batwa ethnic group are being transported from rural areas into Bujumbura with promises of work and subsequently are exploited. (2) Women who offer room and board to children sometimes force the children into commercial sexual exploitation to pay expenses. (12) Burundian girls are also trafficked internationally for commercial sexual exploitation in Kenya, Rwanda, Uganda, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and countries in the Middle East. (7,12,14,20,21) Evidence also suggests that children are trafficked to the Middle East and Tanzania for work in agriculture and for domestic work. (12) In 2021, a local NGO identified 908 cases of children trafficked to Tanzania for forced and child labor purposes. An unreported number of those children were killed when they expressed a desire to return to Burundi. (9)

Children work entire days transplanting rice, and typically drop out of school in the pre-harvest season to guard rice plantations from birds. Children are also utilized as lookouts in the forestry industry to report illegal woodcutting or theft, placing them in potentially dangerous situations when smugglers and thieves are present. (8,9,17) In fishing communities near Lake Tanganyika, boys are often engaged in fishing activities without pay while girls work as cooks or domestic employees and are at risk of sexual exploitation. (8,9,12) Civil society organizations indicate that up to 15 percent of children who are school dropouts in urban centers work in the charcoal trade, either packing, loading, and unpacking charcoal or working in fire pits. (8)

Although the government abolished school fees in 2012, families are often asked to pay for supplies, secondary school fees, and school building maintenance costs, which have prevented many children from accessing free public schooling. (2,9) A dearth of well-trained educators and poor infrastructure have also limited educational opportunity. For example, the lack of gender-separated bathrooms can contribute to a lower attendance rate among girls. (2,9) Children with disabilities and mobility issues face discrimination in schools, along with a lack of appropriate materials and infrastructure, limiting access to education. (22) Moreover, because birth certificates are required to attend school, many unregistered children, in particular children of the Batwa ethnic group, remain out of school and vulnerable to child labor. (2,9,23)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Burundi has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Burundi's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the lack of sufficient prohibitions against the use of children by non-state armed groups.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Articles 2, 10, and 618 of the Labor Code (24)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 270, 279, and 618 of the Labor Code; Article 13 of the Ministerial Ordinance to Regulate Child Labor (25,24)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Articles 9–15 of the Ministerial Ordinance to Regulate Child Labor (25)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 4–6, 10, and 18-20 of the Trafficking in Persons Law; Articles 7 and 617 of the Labor Code (24,26)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 12 of the Labor Code; Articles 4–6, 10, and 18-20 of the Trafficking in Persons Law; Article 197, 246, and 255 of the Penal Code (24-27)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 12 of the Labor Code; Articles 542–544, and 546 of the Penal Code; Articles 4, 10, and 18-20 of the Trafficking in Persons Law (24-27)

Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	No		Article 12 of the Labor Code; Articles 200.6, 200.2.27, 200.5.7 and 202 of the Penal Code (24,27)
Compulsory Education Age	No	15‡	Article 35 of the Law on Basic and Secondary Education (29)
Free Public Education	No		Article 53 of the Constitution; Articles 17, 35, and 47 of the Law on Basic and Secondary Education (29,30)

* Country has no conscription. (28)

‡ Age calculated based on available information. (29)

Legal prohibitions against hazardous work are not comprehensive, as they fail to cover agriculture, an area of work in which there is evidence of children working under difficult conditions such as long hours. (7,25)

Although the Constitution prohibits the use of children in armed conflict, the Penal Code criminalizes only the use of children under age 15 in armed conflict, leaving children between the ages of 15 and 18 vulnerable to this worst form of child labor. (27,31) However, Burundian law does prohibit the recruitment of children under age 18 by state armed forces, and available evidence indicates that the government continued to comply with this provision. (1,15)

Although the Law on Basic and Secondary Education provides for guaranteed free education, some funding from families is required. (29) Burundi implemented education reforms beginning in 2014 that have continued through the present reporting period because of delays caused by civil unrest in 2015. Burundi's education reform plans established that basic education is compulsory through the first 9 years of education, beginning when a child turns age 6. (32,33) The compulsory education age, however, is lower than the minimum age for work, making children between the ages of 15 and 16 vulnerable to labor exploitation. (34)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Employment	Administers and enforces all labor laws, including those on child labor, through the Inspector General of Work and Social Security. (35)
Ministry of Interior, Community Development, and Public Security	Conducts criminal investigations on the worst forms of child labor, including forced child labor, child trafficking, and the use of children in illicit activities. Through the Burundi National Police's Unit for the Protection of Minors and Morals, protects children from commercial sexual exploitation, illicit activity, forced labor, and military recruitment. (1,2,7,14,15)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecutes cases of the worst forms of child labor through its General Prosecutor's Office. (1,2,7)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Burundi took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Employment that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including an insufficient number of labor inspectors.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2020	2021

While the government indicated it conducted labor inspections during the reporting period, the government did not provide full law enforcement data for inclusion in this report. However, partners such as UNICEF reported having identified 24 child labor violations during the reporting period. (9)

Burundi lacks local inspectors in 14 of its 18 provinces. (2) Furthermore, the number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Burundi's workforce, which includes over 5.2 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Burundi would need to employ about 132 inspectors. (37) Reporting suggests that inspections are conducted exclusively in the formal sector, in which child labor is relatively rare, and exclude the agricultural sector. (2,9,38,39)

Government officials have acknowledged that the labor inspectorate budget is not sufficient, and inspectors do not have sufficient resources to adequately carry out their duties. (8,9) Research found that financial constraints hamper the Inspector General of Work and Social Security's enforcement of child labor laws because annual funding does not cover fuel costs, per diem, or office supplies, nor does the labor inspectorate own any vehicles. (6,7,40)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Burundi took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including insufficient resource allocation.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In November of 2021, the Government of Burundi passed a new migration law that, in addition to defining government agencies' various responsibilities in enforcing migration regulations, also provides a legal basis to enable interventions to prevent the trafficking of vulnerable populations. (41) In addition, the government continued to implement measures to prevent international child trafficking, including sending diplomatic notes to neighboring countries requesting that Burundian minors exiting through their respective ports of entry to Gulf countries be returned to Burundi. (42)

During the reporting period, Burundi developed its first ever data collection system for human trafficking cases and trained prosecutors and judges on how to utilize the system. Developed with assistance from international partners such as the IOM, the database houses information from law enforcement and judicial personnel from all 18 provinces dating back 6 years and is maintained by 54 newly appointed human trafficking specialists. (12,43) Meanwhile, the Ministry of Interior, Community Development and Public Security provided training to 280 Judicial Police on human trafficking issues, including child trafficking. (42)

The government operates multiple hotlines that assist in the identification of child trafficking victims, including one managed by the Ad Hoc Committee for Consultation and Monitoring on the Prevention and Suppression of Trafficking in Persons, and another specifically to report child abuse managed by the Ministry of National Solidarity, Social Affairs, Human Rights and Gender. During the reporting period, authorities indicated that the hotlines identified 33 cases of child trafficking that resulted in investigations and referrals to social services. (42) The government and the IOM reported identifying 61 cases of child labor trafficking, while UNICEF reported identifying 613 cases of child labor trafficking. (42) The government did not provide complete information on its criminal law enforcement efforts for inclusion in this report. (9)

Burundi

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The government lacked resources to fully implement criminal law enforcement strategies. For example, while the Burundi National Police Unit for the Protection of Minors and Morals was responsible for investigating trafficking in persons, sex trafficking, and child and forced labor issues, it lacked capacity and often did not receive referrals from other police units. (20) The government acknowledged that officials are unfamiliar with the 2014 anti-trafficking law and thus are not sufficiently familiar with the concepts of the worst forms of child labor. (12,14,39)

Burundi lacks formal guidance for authorities on how to respond to cases potentially involving the worst forms of child labor, and law enforcement lacked sufficient training to properly identify victims. As a result, some officials, including immigration and police officers, reportedly punished child victims of human trafficking or forced labor. (12) Although a referral mechanism between law enforcement and social services exists, civil society organizations indicate it is utilized on an ad hoc basis, thus making it difficult to ensure victims receive services. (3,12) In general, agencies lacked resources necessary to respond to victims' needs and had to rely primarily on services from civil society and international organizations. (12,20)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including lack of Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Employment participation in key coordinating bodies.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Multisector Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Under the Child and Family Department and the Ministry of National Solidarity, Social Affairs, Human Rights, and Gender, works with local NGOs to address child protection issues. (8,9) During the reporting period, the committee met on a twice monthly basis to focus on child protection issues. (9)
Ad Hoc Committee for Consultation and Monitoring on the Prevention and Repression of Trafficking in Persons	Under the office of the Vice President, responsible for coordinating national anti-trafficking efforts. Includes officials from the Ministries of Foreign Affairs and Development Cooperation; Justice; Interior; and Community Development and Public Security. (14) During the reporting period, assisted in the development of Burundi's first data collection system on human trafficking. (43)

In order to establish a permanent coordinating body for human trafficking issues, the government inaugurated the Consultation and Monitoring Commission on Prevention and Repression of Trafficking in Persons in 2021. Led by the Office of the Prime Minister, the permanent commission is made up of seven members from relevant ministries and will take the place of the ad hoc committee. (42)

Research was unable to identify evidence of the Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Employment's participation in the activities of the Multisector Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor. Furthermore, while sources indicate the Multisector Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor was active during the reporting period, participating NGOs have indicated that the committee is more effective in the areas around Bujumbura and lacks a presence upcountry, limiting its ability to respond to urgent cases outside of the capital region. (8)

While the Ad Hoc Committee was active during the reporting period, it did not receive any dedicated funds from the government for the fiscal year and thus was reliant upon funding sources from international organizations. (12,14) Furthermore, there is a lack of coordination and training among stakeholders to properly classify and respond to cases of human trafficking. (3)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including a lack of relevant policies covering all worst forms of child labor.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Burundi National Development Plan (2018–2027)	Aims to address economic and social challenges in the country, with goals to target poverty and access to education. Seeks to enhance youth employment through strategies such as updates to the labor code and improvements in basic and vocational education. (45) In 2021, as part of the policy and in cooperation with the UN, Burundi released its 2021 Burundi Joint Resettlement and Reintegration Plan, which projected that the country would need to provide services to 143,000 returning refugees at a cost of $104.3 million. (46)

‡ The government has other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (47)

In 2021, the government had yet to renew its national action plan to address child labor, which expired in 2015, or its anti-human trafficking plan which expired in 2020. The government has indicated it is still implementing the expired action plan on human trafficking. (12,42)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Centers for Family Development†	Operated by the Ministry of National Solidarity, Social Affairs, Human Rights, and Gender; address human rights issues, including child exploitation, and reintegrate victims in their home communities. Coordinate with Child Protection Committees to refer victims to local NGOs for care, when necessary. (48) Remained active throughout the country during the reporting period, focusing on issues such as child protection and gender-based violence. (49-51)
Country Program for the Promotion of Decent Work (2020–2023)†*	Officially launched in 2021 and implemented by the Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Employment in partnership with ILO, aims to increase job opportunities for vulnerable populations, such as youth who are at risk of becoming victims of human trafficking, and to promote the application of international labor standards. (14,52)
Education Cannot Wait, Burundi Multi-Year Resilience Program*	Launched in 2021 through a collaborative agreement among the Government of Burundi, UNICEF, and World Vision, a 3-year, $12 million grant aiming to provide educational opportunities to 130,000 vulnerable children and reduce the risks of exploitation, including child labor, for vulnerable families. (53)
IOM Anti-Trafficking Programs	Includes the Burundi Counter-Trafficking (2019–2022) program launched in partnership with the Kingdom of the Netherlands, which aims to reinforce government anti-human trafficking efforts by improving coordination among government ministries, Burundi National Police, and civil society organizations. Also aims to strengthen the national referral system for the protection of, and improve reintegration services for, human trafficking victims. (20,54) Includes the USAID-funded "National Response to Victim Protection, Prevention, and Prosecution of Trafficking in Burundi" program, a 2-year, $1.5 million project that seeks to improve Burundi's capacity by raising awareness, improving victim services, and centralizing government counter-trafficking efforts. (55) During the reporting period, IOM reported it had facilitated the rescue and return of 12 Burundian females who had been trafficked to Kuwait and Saudi Arabia for exploitation in domestic servitude. USAID project funds enabled the survivors' return and reintegration back to Burundi. (56)
"Back to School" Campaign†	UNICEF campaign to promote equitable access and retention in school for basic education students. In 2021, the program provided school kits to over 2.5 million children in cooperation with the World Bank and the Global Partnership for Education. (57)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Burundi.

Research found no evidence that the government has carried out programs to assist children working in agriculture, in which child labor is most prevalent.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Burundi (Table 11).

In 2021, Cabo Verde made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government amended the Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure to increase penalties for sexual crimes committed against children, notably those between the ages of 14 and 16. These amendments also increase penalties by one-third in situations involving family relationships or guardianships, and attribute accountability not only to perpetrators but also to those who assist in the victimization of children. In addition, the Cabo Verdean Institute for Children and Adolescents launched a program to ensure that children remain in school and stay off the streets. Furthermore, a National Plan to Prevent and Combat Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents, along with a National Communications Strategy for the Prevention and Combat of Sexual Violence were approved.

In 2021, Maio Island recorded zero cases of child labor after having recorded the highest number of cases in the country during the previous reporting period, due to extensive awareness-raising efforts conducted throughout the island and increased collaboration between relevant agencies. However, children in Cabo Verde are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Laws prohibiting forced labor are not sufficient as they do not criminalize practices similar to slavery or debt bondage and forced or compulsory labor. In addition, communication among law enforcement agencies is limited and social programs to assist children involved in agriculture and domestic work are not sufficient to address the scope of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Cabo Verde are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-6) Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. (6-8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Cabo Verde.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	10 to 14	3.2 (2,392)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	90.1
Combining Work and School (%)	10 to 14	1.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		100.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2019, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2022. (9)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including carrying heavy loads† (1,7,8,11)
	Raising livestock (12)
	Artisanal fishing in small boats† (8,13)
Industry	Construction, including sand extraction (8,13)
Services	Domestic work (1,7,8,11)
	Street work, including vending, garbage scavenging,† car washing, and begging (6-8,13-15)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-5)
	Use in illicit activities, including drug trafficking (6,12)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

As of June 2021, the Cabo Verdean Institute for Children and Adolescents in Maio Island reported zero child labor cases, likely due to extensive awareness-raising efforts conducted throughout the island and increased collaboration between relevant agencies. In 2020, according to the Institute, the island had recorded the highest number of cases in the country. (16)

The commercial sexual exploitation of boys and girls, including in the tourism industry, occurs in Cabo Verde. (3,4,6,12) Research indicates that the islands of Sal and Boa Vista register the highest incidence of commercial sexual exploitation of children. (2) In addition, anecdotal reports indicate that children may have been victims of commercial sexual exploitation on the islands of Brava, Santiago, Fogo, and São Vicente. (6)

According to the Cabo Verdean Institute for Children and Adolescents (ICCA), not all special needs students or children in remote areas of Cabo Verde have equal access to education. In some areas, children must travel long distances through mountainous topography to reach secondary schools. (8)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Cabo Verde has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Cabo Verde's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the prohibition of forced labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 261 of the Labor Code (17)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 264 of the Labor Code; Article 133 of the Civil Code (17,18)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		National List of Dangerous Work for Children (19)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	No		Article 14 of Chapter 3 of the Labor Code; Articles 271 and 271-A of the Penal Code (17,20,21)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 149 and 271-A of the Penal Code (20)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 144, 145, 148–150, and 271-A of the Penal Code (20)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 8 of the Drug Trafficking Law (22)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	17	Article 31 of the Military Service Law (23)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	Yes		Article 2 of the Military Service Law (23)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Article 268-C of the Penal Code (20)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15‡	Articles 13 and 20 of the Education Law (24)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 14 of the Education Law (24)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (25)

In 2021, amendments were made to the Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, increasing penalties, in some cases by several years, for sexual crimes committed against children up to age 16, including commercial sexual exploitation crimes. These amendments also increase penalties by one-third in cases involving a family relationship or guardianship, and not only hold perpetrators accountable but also any persons who may have assisted in the victimization of children in such crimes. (21)

Laws prohibiting forced labor are not sufficient because they do not criminalize practices similar to slavery, including debt bondage and forced or compulsory labor. (17,20) The Civil Code includes a list of light work activities that children age 14 are allowed to perform; however, the law does not prescribe the number of hours per week permissible for light work, nor does it specify the conditions under which light work may be performed. (18,26,27)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Inspector General for Labor	Monitors and enforces child labor laws, working closely with the Cabo Verdean Institute for Children and Adolescents (ICCA). (11)
Attorney General's Office	Determines whether cases have merit and refers relevant cases to the Judicial Police for further investigation. Prepares cases for trial. (28)
Judicial Police and National Police	Judicial Police conduct criminal investigations; National Police make arrests related to the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking. (8)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Cabo Verde took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Inspector General for Labor (IGT) that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including insufficient financial resource allocation.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

† Data are from January 2020 to June 2020. (11)

During the reporting period, labor inspectors received training on laws related to child labor and hazardous child labor. In addition, about a quarter of the IGT's labor inspectors completed a 15-hour online training focused on the elimination of child labor, along with other participants from the community of Portuguese-speaking countries. (8) Course objectives focused on increasing participants' understanding of child labor and how to eliminate it, sharing best practices to address the challenges of the COVID-19 pandemic, and defining how governments and relevant entities can be more effective toward eliminating child labor. (30)

From January to June 2021, ICCA received 17 allegations of child labor violations through its child protection hotline. ICCA conducts informal inspections when it receives any allegations of child labor and keeps the Attorney General's office informed whenever further investigative action is needed. (8) All child labor cases found by IGT inspectors are referred to ICCA for care or for referral to social services providers. (8)

Reports indicate that the number of labor inspectors is insufficient to cover the entire country. The IGT also reported that its budget is not sufficient to fulfill all its operational needs. (8)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Cabo Verde took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including insufficient allocation of human resources.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Unknown	Unknown
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A	N/A

Number of Investigations	Unknown	Unknown
Number of Violations Found	Unknown	Unknown
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown	Unknown
Number of Convictions	0 (31)	1 (32)
Imposed Penalties for Violations Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Unknown	Unknown
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (11)	Yes (8)

The government did not provide information on its criminal law enforcement efforts for inclusion in this report. However, reports indicate that the Judicial Police and the National Police often lack the necessary financial and human resources to conduct thorough investigations, including cases of child labor. (33)

Although the government compiled anti-trafficking statistics during the reporting period, reports indicate that comprehensive sharing of anti-human trafficking and victim protection data remained weak among agencies. (6) In addition, while law enforcement agencies work well together, limited coordination between these agencies, such as struggles in sharing case information and updates, may hinder their enforcement efforts. (12) Reports indicate that the judicial system is overburdened with a backlog of cases, which can contribute to a lack of protection for child victims of the worst forms of child labor, including children subjected to commercial sexual exploitation. (2,3,33)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for Child Labor Prevention and Eradication in Cabo Verde	Coordinates the execution of the National Action Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and provides a functional mechanism for reciprocal referrals between law enforcement and social services. Led by ICCA, with support from the Ministry of Youth, Labor and Development of Human Resources. (34) In 2021, continued drafting an updated National Action Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor. (8)
ICCA	Coordinates and monitors the implementation of all national programs and activities to prevent and eliminate child labor. Works closely with the Inspector General for Labor and the National Committee for Child Labor Prevention and Eradication on all matters related to prevention and elimination of child labor in the country. (8) During the reporting period, began collecting data to better understand how the pandemic is affecting the child labor situation in the country. Moreover, launched a program to ensure children remain in school and stay off the streets and conducted a mapping analysis of NGOs and community associations involved in the protection of children's rights. (8,35,36)
Children and Adolescent Committee to Prevent and Combat Sexual Abuse and Exploitation	Contributes to the prevention and elimination of child sexual exploitation by coordinating the activities of member organizations and public and private services. Supervises, monitors, and evaluates the National Plan to Combat Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents. (12) Led by ICCA. (37) In 2021, in collaboration with UNICEF, drafted the new National Plan to Prevent and Combat Sexual Violence against Children and Adolescents (2022–2024), which was approved by the government. (38,39)
Observatory for Monitoring and Rapid Identification of Situations of Trafficking in Persons	Coordinates and monitors all efforts to eliminate human trafficking. Comprises law enforcement, NGOs, civil society, and various government agencies. (12,40) Led by the Ministry of Justice and Labor. (12) In 2021, conducted meetings with representatives of law enforcement and other agencies and, with IOM, participated in a launch of standard operating procedure manuals for entities responsible for responding to cases of human trafficking. (8)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies that are consistent with relevant international standards on child labor (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor	Prioritizes the eradication of child labor. Outlines specific objectives, including data collection, institutional capacity building, and enhancement of measures to prevent, protect, and remove children from involvement in child labor. (34) Active in 2021. (8)
National Plan to Prevent and Combat Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents (2022–2024)†	Aims to prevent and eliminate the sexual exploitation of children by building on lessons learned from the previous plan, while ensuring coordination among institutions and organizations that work to prevent and address sexual violence against children and adolescents. Establishes five goals, including (1) the active participation of children and adolescents; (2) the development of preventive actions against sexual violence; (3) a network of specialized care by trained professionals; (4) combating impunity; and (5) strengthening the national, regional and local entities focused on combating and eliminating sexual violence against children and adolescents, including commercial sexual exploitation. (39)
National Communication Strategy for the Prevention and Combat of Sexual Violence†	Aims to coordinate public policies to protect children and adolescents against sexual violence, including commercial sexual exploitation. Approved in August 2021 for implementation in 2022. (41)
Code of Ethics Against the Sexual Exploitation of Children	Guides and governs agencies involved in the tourism sector to eliminate the commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents. (42) In 2021, UNICEF, in partnership with ICCA, introduced the Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children from Sexual Exploitation in Travel and Tourism to the Cabo Verdean Institute of Tourism, the Association of Tourist guides, travel agencies, hotels, and NGOs. (36)
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2018–2021)	Prioritized five strategic areas: prevention, awareness, protection, investigation, and coordination. (43) Established the Observatory for Monitoring and Rapid Identification of Situations of Trafficking in Persons. (12,40) Implemented during the reporting period. (8)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating and preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of efforts to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Labor Awareness Campaigns†	Government program implemented by ICCA and the National Committee for Child Labor Prevention and Eradication that conducts national awareness-raising campaigns on the worst forms of child labor. (8) In 2021, a campaign was conducted in the capital to raise awareness of the consequences of child labor among parents and the community. (44)
Help for At-Risk Children and Social Protection and Reintegration Centers†	ICCA-implemented program that provides education, health services, and professional training to vulnerable children and their families. (33) Operates six day centers for street children vulnerable to sexual and labor exploitation, including sex trafficking. Moreover, ICCA operates three additional centers for street children through its Nós Kaza project. (33) The government also operates five long-term social protection and reintegration centers that provide support and educational integration services to children who have experienced long-term trauma, including child trafficking. (45) In 2021, a new day center was opened in Maio Island. (46)
Child Emergency Centers†	ICCA-implemented program that operates two emergency centers for child victims of abuse and sexual exploitation on Santiago and São Vicente islands, operating 24/7. (34) Active in 2021. (8)
Cabo Verdean Foundation for Social Action in Education†	Government programs aimed at providing access to education for disadvantaged children by paying for school fees, materials, and meals. (47) In 2021, continued collecting donations for school kits, including backpacks, uniforms, notebooks, and books, to be distributed to students in need. (48)

† Program is funded by the Government of Cabo Verde.

Research indicates that awareness-raising efforts on human trafficking, including child sex tourism, remained insufficient on some of the nine inhabited islands. (6) Research also found that programs to assist children involved in agriculture and domestic work are not sufficient to address the scope of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Cabo Verde (Table I I).

Table I I. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws prohibiting forced labor criminalize slavery and practices similar to slavery, including debt bondage and forced or compulsory labor.	2021
	Prescribe by law the number of hours per week and conditions under which light work may be undertaken.	2015 – 2021
Enforcement	Publish information on labor inspectorate funding and ensure that the number of labor inspectors is sufficient to cover the country's workforce.	2011 – 2021
	Ensure that the Inspector General for Labor is provided with an adequate budget to fulfill all its needs.	2021
	Ensure that criminal investigators receive sufficient financial and human resources to conduct thorough investigations, including investigations of child labor.	2014 – 2021
	Make criminal law enforcement data publicly available, including information on training for new criminal investigators, whether refresher courses are provided, and the number of investigations conducted, violations found, prosecutions initiated, and penalties imposed for violations related to the worst forms of child labor.	2011 – 2021

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED PRACTICE THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In 2021, Cambodia made minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government launched its first 5-year National Action Plan to Prevent and Respond to Online Child Sexual Exploitation (2021–2025). The government also held campaigns and workshops to raise awareness about child labor and gender equity in the freshwater fishing sector. However, despite new initiatives to address child labor, Cambodia is assessed as having made only minimal advancement because it continued to implement practices that delay advancement to eliminate child labor. The government failed to take active measures to investigate, prosecute, convict, and sentence public officials who participate in or facilitate the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation of children and debt-based forced labor in brick kilns. In addition, judges were reported to have accepted bribes in return for dismissal of charges, acquittal, and reduced sentencing for individuals committing such crimes, especially for those with alleged ties to the government. Children in Cambodia are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in forced labor in brickmaking. In addition, the government did not publicly release information on its criminal law enforcement efforts.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Cambodia are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in forced labor in brickmaking. (1-4) Table I provides key indicators on children's work and education in Cambodia.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In Cambodian brick factories, some children engage in forced labor, sometimes in dangerous conditions, to offset family debt to employers. (2,3,14,23,28,30,31) The rapid growth in the construction industry, particularly in Phnom Penh and Sihanoukville, has increased the demand for bricks and fueled child labor and debt bondage. (11,28,30,32) Failed harvests from droughts have compounded farmers' debts; harvest are sold to brick kiln owners, thus placing farmers' families into hereditary debt bondage until the debts are repaid. (2,11,14,28,30-34) The government's 2019 census of all 486 operational kilns in the country found no instances of child labor or debt bondage. These results contradict findings by independent researchers, which show high rates of child labor and debt bondage at brick kilns. (11,15,23,29,34-38)

Research indicated that some children work on rubber plantations in northeastern Cambodia to help pay off loan debt taken on by their parents, putting them at risk for debt bondage. There is also research indicating that children in domestic work face similar debt bondage conditions. Approximately 30 percent of child domestic workers are under the age of 18. (15)

Although Cambodia conducted a nationwide survey of child labor in 2019—the first such survey since 2012—it has yet to publish the results of this survey or make the data publicly available. (11,13,15,36)

Cambodia is a source and destination country for child trafficking, both transnational and domestic. Some Cambodian children are trafficked transnationally, in particular to other countries in Asia or to countries in the Middle East where traffickers may force them to work on fishing vessels, especially on Thai-owned and -operated fishing vessels, in the agriculture and construction sectors, in factories, in domestic work (often through debt-based coercion), or for purposes of commercial sexual exploitation. (3,14,26) However, the COVID-19 pandemic decreased such migration along with all types of cross-border travel. (3,14,26) Children living in Cambodia are also vulnerable to domestic trafficking. Children, girls in particular, are subjected to domestic human trafficking, from rural to urban areas, and internationally, to countries such as Thailand and Vietnam, for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation (CSEC). (12,14,23,25,26,30) Girls as young as age 14 are "bride trafficked" to

China for CSEC, and research found that the number of these cases has doubled since 2020. Many of these girls had previously worked in the garment, hospitality, and tourism sectors, which were particularly impacted by the pandemic. (15,26,39)

The largely unregulated growth of casinos, entertainment establishments, and other commercial enterprises owned by the People's Republic of China (PRC) in Preah Sihanouk Province led to an increase of Cambodian girls in forced labor, including sex trafficking, although such activity has decreased since Cambodia banned online gambling in August 2019, leading to an exodus of PRC businesses and citizens. (14,15,23,26,40) In addition, PRC and Southeast Asian nationals as young as age 15 were trafficked into Cambodia to work in online gambling and internet scam operations, particularly in the port town of Sihanoukville; some of these girls are victims of commercial sexual exploitation. (2)

Online sexual exploitation of children (OSEC) is reportedly increasing in Cambodia, facilitated by an increase in cheap, high-speed Internet access. (10,11,25,26,41-43) Furthermore, during the reporting period, a survey conducted by NGOs noted a rise in the reported number of OSEC cases after schools closed at the height of the pandemic. With children spending more time online, the survey noted that 15 percent of children reported having been contacted by strangers on social media, and 2 percent reported having been asked to share intimate pictures or videos, or to perform inappropriate acts in front of their webcams. (15,44,45)

Research has found that children who are placed in residential care facilities or orphanages in Cambodia are at a higher risk of engaging in the worst forms of child labor, including child sexual exploitation, and are exposed to conditions that can negatively affect their developmental and health outcomes. (11,14,25,26,46) Many private residential care institutions reportedly exploit children as "sham" orphans to lure donations from foreigners. (11,25,46)

Although the Education Law establishes free basic education, unofficial school-related fees, such as for building maintenance and school uniforms, are prohibitive for some families. (11,15,20,47) Other barriers to education include denied enrollment for children without birth certificates, limited transportation to schools in remote areas and at "floating schools," lack of drinking water, sanitation and toilet facilities in some schools, language barriers, threat of corporal punishment, and an insufficient number of teachers. These barriers particularly affect ethnic minority children, children with disabilities, and children from rural and disadvantaged communities. (9,11,14,15,46,48,49) Furthermore, children may only transfer schools during two designated periods per year, resulting in some children repeating a year of schooling because of the disruption in the school year, which can contribute to dropout rates among children living in temporary settings, including migrant children. (15,49)

While education is free through grade nine, it is not compulsory. (46,47,50) Nearly 13 percent of primary school-age children were not enrolled in school during the reporting year. (2) The lack of compulsory schooling makes children under age 15 particularly vulnerable to child labor because they are not required to be in school but are not yet legally permitted to work. (47,50-52) Most Cambodian children attend school only 4 hours a day, so many children spend the remainder of the day with their parents on or near work-sites. (2) More than 60 percent of children with disabilities are unable to attend school, according to the Cambodian Disabled People's Organization. (2,53) In addition, sanitation conditions are unsafe in Cambodia's 34 "floating schools" in or around fishing communities, and children as young as age 6 often travel to school by boat, many of whom are ethnic Vietnamese and face language barriers. (2) of the country's primary schools, 60 percent are without access to water and more than 25 percent are without access to latrines. (2) Children from indigenous groups in particular face challenges in accessing education, including "incomplete schools" (in which not all grades are supported), the lack of availability of secondary schools, and large geographical distances between homes and schools. (2)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Cambodia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Cambodia's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the minimum age for work and prohibiting the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	15	Article 177 of the Labor Law (51)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 173 and 177 of the Labor Law; Regulation on the Prohibition of Hazardous Child Labor; Articles 339 and 340 of the Penal Code (51-55)

Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 15 and 16 of the Labor Law; Articles 10, 12, 15–17, and 19 of the Law on Suppression of Human Trafficking and Sexual Exploitation; Article 80 of Law on Juvenile Justice (51,56,57)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 10–20 and 22 of the Law on Suppression of Human Trafficking and Sexual Exploitation (56)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Articles 15, 28, 33–37, and 41 of the Law on Suppression of Human Trafficking and Sexual Exploitation; Articles 284, 289, and 346 of the Penal Code (55,56)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 345 of the Penal Code; Articles 3 and 47 of the Law on Control of Drugs (55,58)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 42 of the Law on General Statutes for the Military Personnel of the Royal Cambodian Armed Forces (59)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	Yes		The Law on General Statutes for the Military Personnel of the Royal Cambodian Armed Forces (59)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	No
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 31 of the Education Law (47)

In October 2021, an amendment to the Labor Law was promulgated. (60) Among the changes included in this amendment is a provision establishing Cambodian labor inspectors as having the status of "judicial police," which gives them the authority to arrest people suspected of labor violations that are also criminal violations. (40)

Although the Labor Code prohibits work by children under age 15, the law does not apply to children outside of formal employment relationships and, therefore, does not conform to international standards that require all children be protected under the law that sets a minimum age for work. (46,54) The Ministry of Labor and Vocational Training's (MOLVT) regulation on household work extends minimum age protections for domestic workers to age 18 and provides clear definitions of household work. However, the regulation does not specify legal protections for household workers employed in informal relationships, including when working for their relatives without a contract. (10,46,50,51,61)

Cambodian laws also do not sufficiently prohibit the commercial sexual exploitation of children, as the use or offering of a child for pornographic performances is not criminally prohibited. (20,55)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Vocational Training (MOLVT)	Head of MOLVT's Child Labor Bureau also serves as the Secretary General of the National Committee on Countering Child Labor (NCCL). (11,15,62) Enforces child-related provisions of the Labor Law, and trains Commune Committees for Women and Children that oversee local child labor monitoring systems. (62) Includes 24 MOLVT inter-departmental inspection teams. (63) Tasked with removing children from child labor, including at brick kilns. (11) Employs 1 child labor inspector in each of Cambodia's 25 provinces. (10,64)
Ministry of the Interior—Cambodian National Police—Anti-Human Trafficking and Juvenile Protection Department (AHTJP), Anti-Cybercrime Department, and Department of Criminal Police of General Commissariat	Anti-Human Trafficking and Juvenile Protection Police are commanded by the Ministry of the Interior and report to the AHTJP Department Director. (20,25) Enforce laws against human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children (CSEC), in collaboration with municipal and provincial anti-human trafficking and juvenile protection offices. (20,25) Field complaints from the public about human trafficking, which can be filed through the anti-human trafficking hotline. (38) Oversee the Information and Technology Office, which searches for evidence of trafficking in persons and sexual exploitation of children on the Internet, in printed media, and in other sources. (26,62,63)
Provincial Police Commissariats—Bureaus of Anti-Human Trafficking and Juvenile Protection and Bureaus of Criminal Police	Through their Anti-Trafficking and Juvenile Protection Bureaus, enforce laws against human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children at the provincial level. Coordinates with the AHTJP. (15,38) Through their Criminal Police Bureaus, enforce criminal law at the provincial level. Coordinates with the Department of Criminal Police. (15,38)
Ministry of Defense—Cambodian Royal Armed Forces—Cambodia Royal Gendarmerie (CRG)—Bureau of Anti-Human Trafficking and Juvenile Protection	Mandated to enforce laws against human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children found within the military. (38)
Ministry of Tourism—Tourism Police Department	Tourism Police Department works to address the sexual exploitation of children in travel and tourism and child trafficking. Disseminates public awareness materials to counter child sexual abuse. (26)

During the reporting year, the Ministry of Land Management, Urban Planning, and Construction, which oversees construction sites, trained 330 of its inspectors on ensuring safe working conditions using a new checklist; inspections resumed in March 2022. However, the checklist does not include items specific to child labor and the training was not coordinated with MOLVT's labor inspectorate. (2)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Cambodia took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of MOLVT that may hinder adequate enforcement of child labor laws, including financial resource allocation.

During the reporting period, MOLVT conducted 176 inspections, down sharply from 1,824 in 2020 due to the pandemic; it did not specify how many of these were routine inspections and how many were unannounced or “special” inspections.(40) MOLVT indicated it only conducts unannounced labor inspections for cases in which a specific request was made or a serious violation was reported. (2) In October 2021, MOLVT launched a pilot project for online factory self-assessments for all garment, footwear, and travel goods factories, which will serve as background information for in-person inspections that may resume in mid-2022. (2)

The Child Labor Bureau primarily focuses on inspections of brick kilns, and relies on other MOLVT bureaus to alert them to possible child labor issues in other sectors before inspections occur. (40) Staff in MOLVT bureaus are not equipped with the proper technical training or expertise to identify child labor, resulting in staff typically asking very few questions during inspections. (10,11) In an effort to improve labor inspectors' performance, MOLVT requires all national-level labor inspectors take and pass a yearly online examination that aims to assess and improve overall technical skills and legal knowledge in order to continue working as labor inspectors. (11,38) The government has established joint inspection teams composed of officials from MOLVT, the Ministry of Industry and Handicrafts, the Ministry of the Environment, and the Ministry of Tourism. These teams are tasked with monitoring adherence to labor laws in the garment, tourism, industrial, handicraft, and entertainment and nightlife sectors. (15,38,66)

The government proactively inspects only two sectors for child labor: the brick kiln industry and the export garment sector. Research indicated that labor inspectors were rarely able to conduct inspections in the construction sector, as owners who were closely affiliated with government officials or powerful tycoons were able to obstruct labor inspectors from accessing their properties. (3,11,15,38,40) MOLVT officials said they had not yet conducted inspections in the entertainment sector, in part because they were not sure if they had sufficient legal authority to do so. (3,65) In the brick kiln industry, authorities often provided brick kiln owners with advance notice of inspections, enabling them to conceal abuses, including child labor violations. In addition, police view brick kiln inspection as the MOLVT's responsibility and said they would only investigate a kiln if the MOLVT asked them to and reported suspected criminal activity, which they have not to date. (14)

The government, the ILO, and NGOs all agree that the labor inspectorate is insufficiently funded and there is an insufficient number of labor inspections. This, in turn, impacts the ability of the labor inspectorate to conduct inspections outside of Phnom Penh and in rural communities due to lack of funding for transportation costs, resulting in most child labor inspections occurring in the city of Phnom Penh and in the provincial, formal-sector factories rather than in rural areas in which a majority of child laborers work. (2,7,10,11,15,46,67) The lack of funding is also one factor preventing the labor inspectorate from conducting inspections in hospitality and nightlife establishments after business hours, because the labor inspectorate is unable to pay inspectors for overtime work. (10,15,46) While unannounced inspections are permitted, they rarely happen in practice. (10,11,15,64)

MOLVT has established regulations for children on hazardous work in several sectors, including in agriculture, brickmaking, and fishing. However, malfeasance within MOLVT and law enforcement agencies limits the capacity of local authorities to adequately enforce these regulations, resulting in penalties related to the worst forms of child labor rarely being imposed in accordance with the law. (9-11,15,46,68) Overall, research indicates that the government lacks the capacity to deal with child labor and is overwhelmed by the scale of the issue, particularly in Preah Sihanouk, leading to an increase in the number of child laborers at construction sites and entertainment venues, including casinos, hotels, and karaoke bars. (11,15)

During the reporting period, MOLVT launched two social media “channels” on the app Telegram where the public can submit complaints on child labor violations. This is in addition to the existing “1297” phone hotline, MOLVT’s Facebook page, or calling a labor inspector directly using phone numbers published on MOLVT’s website. (2)

The government did not publish data on the labor inspectorate funding, training for new labor inspectors, and number of routine inspections conducted.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Cambodia took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Cambodian National Police that may hinder adequate enforcement of child labor laws, including training for criminal investigators.

Research found that criminal law enforcement officials continued to fail to take significant actions on credible reports of government officials being complicit in the worst forms of child labor, including at entertainment establishments in which the commercial sexual exploitation of children is known to occur, and at brick kilns whose owners may subject families, including children, to debt-based forced labor. (2,14,23,46,69) In particular, police officers admitted that they sometimes avoid investigating child labor complaints at brick kilns, and instead assist in the capture and jailing of runaway brick kiln workers to avoid potential retaliation by politically connected owners who use their connections to avoid potential investigations and fines. (2,14,28,46,70,71) The government failed to make significant efforts to investigate, prosecute, or convict government officials complicit in the worst forms of child labor. (3,14,23,46,69)

Government officials profited directly from the commercial sexual exploitation of children and indirectly by being permissive of it, especially when undertaken in establishments owned by those with ties to the government. (2,3,14,70,72) Furthermore, research found that owners of entertainment establishments at which child sexual exploitation is known to occur sometimes used their connections to law enforcement officials to avoid investigation, prosecution, and fines. (2,14,23,46,70,72) Research also found instances when raids into these establishments were thwarted by “tip-offs” from working-level police in advance of the raids. (3,14,23)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED PRACTICE THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

To minimize internal leaks, some provincial police chiefs turned cases over to the Anti-Human Trafficking Juvenile Police, which conducted independent raids without notifying the local authorities until moments before they began. (3,14) In 2021, U.S. law enforcement officials referred nine potential cases of online child sexual exploitation to Cambodia's anti-human trafficking and cybercrime specialists, leading to four arrests under Cambodian domestic trafficking laws. (43)

In addition, many law enforcement officials, particularly those located in rural areas, are unaware of how to properly conduct anti-trafficking in persons work, as most have not received training on basic law enforcement techniques. (3,14,23) Furthermore, law enforcement officials investigating suspected human trafficking cases are expected to personally cover all expenses of the investigation, including transportation costs, and are rarely reimbursed in full or on time. This has led to officials reportedly pursuing cases for which costs will be covered on their behalf, and makes some law enforcement units more susceptible to malfeasance. (11,14,23,70)

Research also found that local officials allegedly facilitated cross-border human trafficking by accepting bribes to forge identity documents. (14) Intimidation of human trafficking victims and their families also occurred during the reporting period, perpetuated by a government regulation that bars NGOs from assisting human trafficking victims in seeking formal recognition and obtaining the required identification from the government to receive available victim services. This regulation forces victims and their families to interact directly with criminal law enforcement authorities, resulting in most victims declining to file complaints or obtain the identity documents necessary to receive services. (3,14)

In Cambodia, judges have discretion to determine whether perpetrators of crimes related to child labor will be imprisoned or fined and the amount of the fine. The penalties imposed are not uniformly administered and do not adhere to the parameters prescribed by law. (14,30,46) In some cases, citing resource constraints and pandemic-related shutdowns, not all trafficking in person cases were brought to court despite evidence being supplied by the police. Prosecutors and judges have been known to accept bribes in return for dismissal of charges, acquittal, and reduced sentencing. (3,14,26,70,73) Research also found that law enforcement misused resources at their disposal to detain, prosecute, and convict some individuals for politically motivated reasons or spurious trafficking in person charges. (14) Furthermore, law enforcement generally focused on deterring foreign involvement in CSEC, despite the fact that the local population constituted the main source of demand. (3,14)

Research indicates that the use of "judicial supervision," where defendants are released on their own recognizance in advance of a trial, has resulted in as many as 30 percent of human trafficking suspects not returning to participate in their criminal trials as law enforcement lacks the resources to monitor defendants. This severely limits the ability of law enforcement officials to hold criminals accountable, putting the population at risk. (3,14,23) Due to a lack of resources, including personnel, and a lack of clear guidelines in the criminal procedural code regarding judicial supervision, law enforcement rarely issued arrest warrants for absconded defendants unless NGOs were available to assist in the apprehension of said defendants. (14) In addition, the government has yet to fully implement the "Child Friendly Court" program as instructed by the Ministry of Justice in 2018 that will make it easier for child victims to provide testimony by using video-conferencing technology instead of confronting defendants in person, which can result in re-traumatization. (14,23)

Cambodian law outlines channels for victim restitution, and research indicated an increase in the number of verdicts ordering traffickers to pay some form of financial recompense to victims. However, this restitution was extremely difficult to obtain due to a legal requirement delaying payment until after the completion of the trafficker's jail term; convicted traffickers' frequent abscondment further complicated this arrangement. (3,14,26) Coupled with the government lacking a procedure on how to calculate compensation, victims rarely received the amount promised, and many victims' families settled out of court with traffickers or accepted bribes to drop the relevant charges. (3,14,26)

The government's ability to properly save and store data related to the worst forms of child labor was found to be inadequate, due to outdated data collection storage platforms and a lack of resources, including training, equipment, and funding. (3,23,38) The government did not provide information on initial training for new employees, refresher courses, the number of prosecutions initiated, the number of convictions, or the number of penalties imposed for violations related to the worst forms of child labor for inclusion in this report.

The Cambodian Human Rights and Development Association reported that it had rescued five children from prostitution in Siem Reap Province in 2021. (2) To help address the emergence of OSEC within Cambodia, a local NGO set up an online platform and a hotline for people to report instances of OSEC. (74,75)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including insufficient inter-ministerial coordination.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee on Countering Child Labor (NCCL)	Serves as the primary interagency coordinating body for the government's various ministries on child labor issues. Labor Minister serves as its chair and the head of MOLVT's Child Labor Bureau serves as the Secretary General. (2) No meetings were held during the reporting year due to the pandemic. (2)
Cambodian National Council for Children	Coordinates child labor issues at the national level, including implementation, monitoring, and evaluation of all child rights policies and programs. (9,25,26,38) Ensures that projects and programs follow the National Plan of Action on the Reduction of Child Labor and Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor. (9) Includes concerned ministries, businesses, trade unions, and NGOs. Oversees Provincial Committees on the Protection of Child Rights and Provincial Committees on Child Labor. (9) Coordinates all government ministries, institutions, international NGOs, development partners, and the community in promoting and protecting children's rights. (76) Oversees the National Child Protection Commission that coordinates and collaborates with government, civil society organizations, and NGOs. (77) Oversees the Online Child Sexual Exploitation (OSEC) Committee, which works in collaboration with nearly 20 institutions and ministries to address online abuse and exploitation of children. (15,38) In 2021, in partnership with other government agencies, organized the official launch ceremony for Cambodia's first 5-year Action Plan to Prevent and Respond to Online Child Sexual Exploitation (OCSE Action Plan 2021–2025). (43,78)
Commune Committees for Women and Children	Advisory entities that raise awareness of child labor regulations, promote school attendance, collaborate with provincial labor departments to monitor for child labor violations, and refer children at risk of or engaged in child labor to social protection services at the local level. Led by the Ministry of Interior's Director General of General Department of Local Administration. (20,25,38) Research was unable to determine whether these coordinating bodies were active during the reporting period.
National Committee for Counter Trafficking (NCCT)	Coordinates government, NGO, civil society, and private sector efforts to address trafficking in persons and sexual exploitation. (3,23,25,79) Produces an annual report documenting the government's anti-trafficking in persons efforts. (3) Focuses on children's affairs, international cooperation, justice, law enforcement, migration, prevention, protection, recovery, reintegration, and repatriation. (80) Chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Interior, with 4 vice chair ministries and 14 participating ministries. (26,30) Oversees Provincial Committees for Counter Trafficking in each province. (3,30,81) Has six working groups with inter-ministerial membership, each chaired by one ministry, including Prevention (Minister of Education); Protection, Recovery, Reintegration, and Repatriation (Minister of Social Affairs); Law Enforcement (Chief of the Cambodian National Police); Justice (Minister of Justice); International Cooperation (Minister of Women's Affairs); and Migration and Labor (Minister of Labor). (3,23,26) Produced an annual report documenting anti-trafficking efforts; however, the report was not exhaustive amidst insufficient data collection. (11) In August 2021, launched a 5-year Anti-Trafficking in Persons project (2021–2026), which will focus on addressing the root causes of human trafficking and protecting vulnerable people, including children from trafficking, labor abuse, and risky migration. (82) In cooperation with Plan Thailand, Cambodia Acts, and the Education Ministry, led a study to identify the needs of bilingual Khmer-Thai Cambodian children who live in Cambodia's Koh Kong Province and Thailand's Trat Province, which was developed to improve access to education for children as they move across the border with their migrant parents and to reduce the risk of trafficking and child labor. (43)
National Committee on Child Protection	Coordinates inter-ministerial action on strengthening Cambodia's child protection system, and preventing and addressing all forms of abuses and violence against children. (15) Reviews and addresses gaps in the legal framework, government policies, and national action plans related to child protection and promoting the effectiveness of law enforcement. Provides technical advice and assistance to enhance child protection. (15) Research was unable to determine whether this coordinating body was active during the reporting period.

Inter-ministerial coordination remains a serious challenge in Cambodia, both for countering child labor and trafficking in persons. (2) The ILO has joined the National Committee for Counter Trafficking (NCCT) and some of the National Committee on Countering Child Labor (NCCT) working groups. However, the coordinating body on child labor, the NCCL, has not invited the ILO to participate in its meetings. (2) Additionally, the Commune Committees for Women and Children continue to be underfunded. (38)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including implementation.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plans of Action on Combating the Worst Forms of Child Labor	National Plan of Action on the Reduction of Child Labor and Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2016–2025) aims to build the capacity of law enforcement officers, strengthen the enforcement of relevant laws, raise public awareness of child labor issues, and enhance child labor monitoring systems at the community level. (20) Overseen by MOLVT. (15) Creates a roadmap to the complete eradication of the worst forms of child labor by 2025 in various sectors, including services, agriculture, mining, and energy. (22,38,50,76) Mandates awareness-raising activities, legal action, and collaborations with civil society actors. (76) During the reporting period, committees continued to prepare a 5-year progress report for endorsement. (2)
Action Plan to Prevent and Respond to Violence Against Children (2017–2021)	Led by the Ministry of Women's Affairs. (63,77) Developed in response to the Cambodia Violence Against Children Survey conducted in 2013. (26,77) Aims to prevent and respond to violence against children, including the worst forms of child labor. (26,42,84) Provides OSEC-related interventions in policy and governance, including: providing training for teachers and developing curriculum to help children build online safety skills; providing OSEC materials to law enforcement; and developing an online hotline to help identify platforms that support the perpetuation of OSEC. (11,26) Works to properly assess the scale and specific nature of OSEC in Cambodia to inform policy. (11) During the reporting period, continued to develop policies related to “child-friendly schools,” including preventing malnutrition. (2)
Action Plan for Gender Equality Promotion and Child Labor Elimination in the Fisheries Sector (2016–2020)	Overseen by the Ministry of Agriculture, Forestry, and Fisheries under the Fisheries Administration of Cambodia (FiA). Aligned with the Strategic Planning Framework for Fisheries (2010–2019). (22) Sought to prevent and withdraw children from child labor and hazardous work in the fisheries sector. (85) During the reporting period, government conducted campaigns and organized workshops to raise awareness of child labor and gender equity, targeting women and children in freshwater fishing areas around the Tonle Sap Lake. (2)
Third 5-Year National Plan of Action on the Suppression of Human Trafficking, Smuggling, Labor, and Sexual Exploitation (2019–2023)	Coordinated by NCCT, with input from the Ministries of Justice; Women's Affairs; Foreign Affairs; Labor; and Social Affairs, Veterans, and Youth Rehabilitation. (10) Aims to prevent and eliminate all forms of human trafficking, including by strengthening criminal law enforcement to protect children from exploitation in entertainment venues, integrating anti-human trafficking and child safety issues into the public school curriculum, and promoting the inclusion of vulnerable children in both formal and informal education. (84) Focused on four strategies: 1) strengthening cooperation in the formulation and implementation of laws, policies, and legal standards; 2) promoting efforts to prevent of all forms of human trafficking; 3) strengthening the criminal justice system; and 4) increasing protection of victims. (29) Research was unable to determine whether these coordinating bodies were active during the reporting period.
Strategic and Operational Plan for the Implementation of Juvenile Justice Law (2018–2020)	Overseen by Ministry of Social Affairs, Veterans and Youth Rehabilitation (MOSAVY), funded by UNICEF. Sought to build a sustainable juvenile justice system, and to provide effective protection and support to incarcerated juveniles who were vulnerable to child labor. (10) During the reporting period, focused on building a sustainable juvenile justice system, and providing effective protection and support to children in conflict with the law. As a result, children in conflict with the law who were in correction centers could more easily access education, healthcare, counseling, and guidance on vocational training. (15) During the reporting year, issued the first diversion order in Kampong Cham; a diversion refers to directing the path of an accused child away from formal court proceedings and toward a more constructive and positive solution. (86)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (8,80,87-90)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including adequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem in all sectors.

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED PRACTICE THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Cambodia Countering Trafficking in Persons (CCTIP) (2015–2020)	$10 million, USAID-funded, 5-year (included a 1-year cost extension) program implemented by Winrock International to strengthen the capacity of government and community stakeholders to prevent human trafficking, protect at-risk populations, and increase the number of successful prosecutions of perpetrators. (63,91) In December 2021, the CCTIP project in collaboration with NCCT released a mid-term review report of the NCCT's 5-year national strategic plan for CCTIP 2019–2023. The mid-term review was conducted to assess the establishment and functions of all PCCTs and all technical working groups under NCCT, the impact of the pandemic on the implementation of the strategy, the results and achievement against the set targets; and to provide concrete recommendations for reinforcement of mechanisms to implement, monitor, and report CCTIP efforts in Cambodia. (2,91)
Better Factories Cambodia†	USDOL, the Government of Cambodia, Garment Manufacturers in Cambodia, and ILO-funded program to monitor garment factories' compliance with national and international labor standards, including those related to child labor. (9,63) Additional information is available on the program's website. During the reporting period, completed 552 virtual compliance checks and found no instances of child labor or suspected child labor. (2)
UN WFP Country Program† (2020–2024)	Multi-government and private sector-funded program implemented in collaboration with the Government of Cambodia that includes a school feeding program for children in need. (92) In 2021, provided school meals to 300,000 vulnerable and poor school children; cash assistance to 3,745 households (18,625 individuals) affected by floods in Pursat, Battambang, and Banteay Meanchey provinces; and capacity strengthening to national and sub-national authorities (the National Committee for Disaster Management and its sub-national authorities) on emergency preparedness and response. (2)
Child Protection Programs: Family Care First (FCF REACT) (2015–2023) and Cambodia Child Protection Program	Family Care First (FCF REACT) is led by MOSAVY. Funded by the European Union, USAID, the GHR Foundation, Save the Children Hong Kong, and UNICEF. (36,63) Aims to support more than 7,000 Cambodian children to live in safe, nurturing, family-based care. (36,63,93) Activities include supporting the development of Social Service Workforce Training curriculum modules, the reintegration of children from residential care institutions to family-based care, the closure and transition of residential care institutions, the provision of prevention and response social services, and continued strengthening of Cambodia's alternative care system. (2) Secretariat and Advisory Board collaborate with ministries, institutions, and relevant NGOs to review, amend, and develop policies, legal standards, concept notes, and strategic plans to support the common goal of ensuring safe, nurturing family-based care for Cambodian children. (11) During the reporting period, awarded over $1 million to six local partners to implement child protection activities and approximately $550,000 to six partners to implement livelihood interventions. Additionally, provided cash transfers to 750 households in 15 provinces to mitigate the financial impacts of the pandemic on vulnerable families. (2) Cambodia Child Protection Program (2009–2023) is led by UNICEF and MOSAVY. Aims to strengthen the child protection system in Cambodia and to prevent and reduce violence against children and unnecessary family separation. (15,38) Builds capacity of national and sub-national authorities in all 25 provinces to formulate and implement nationally approved institutional and legal frameworks. Includes capacity building of the government and civil society child protection workforce to provide direct services delivery to vulnerable children and families. (15) During the reporting period, launched the Child Protection Information Management System, which will enable public-private organizations to measure progress in child protection against 50 key indicators. (2,94)
Cambodia Consortium for Out of School Children—Phase II (2017–2023)	Implemented by Education a Child, Aide et Action, and the Cambodian Consortium for Out of School Children, in collaboration with the Ministry of Education, Youth, and Sports. (2,95–96) Aims to improve access to equitable, high-quality education in 25 provinces in Cambodia for over 116,000 primary school children who are out of school. Focus is on equitable access, quality education, ownership, and accountability. (95,97) In 2021, supported approximately 1,060 out-of-school children to access education. It focused on ensuring that schools have adequate infrastructure and are a safe space for students, built 11 new schools and 78 new classrooms, as well as refurbished 414 classrooms in provinces across Cambodia. (2)

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor.

In 2021, MOLVT visited 170 brick kilns and intervened to help 350 cases involving children who may be vulnerable to child labor and were living on brick kilns or on cassava plantations, with education, vocational training, and jobs. However, MOLVT did not remove any children from child labor as a result of labor inspections. (2,43) MOLVT also disseminated material on child labor prevention to commercial and family-based sugar-cane production operations. (2,43)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED PRACTICE THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

The government lacked sufficient funding to put a system in place to monitor and promote the reintegration of victims of forced labor and human trafficking, including children. As a result, victims are left vulnerable, leaving the government heavily reliant on NGOs to fill this need. (3,14,26,70)

Many poor households in rural communities lack access to a social protection safety net, increasing the vulnerability of children to child labor as a means to supplement family income. (30) Although Cambodia has implemented programs that target child labor, the scope and resources provided to these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. (10,11)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Cambodia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure the minimum age for work applies to all children, including those engaged in informal work in domestic work and employed by their relatives.	2018 – 2021
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the use of a child for pornographic performances.	2015 – 2021
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children by non-state armed groups.	2016 – 2021
	Raise the minimum age for work to the age up to which education is compulsory.	2009 – 2021
Enforcement	Build the capacity of labor law enforcement authorities to enforce child and forced labor regulations by providing more technical training opportunities on how to properly identify child labor during inspections, and offer sufficient resources to labor law authorities to ensure the enforcement of child labor laws through investigations and inspections, including unannounced inspections.	2012 – 2021
	Ensure and permit labor inspectors conduct inspections in the construction and entertainment sectors and impose penalties when child labor violations are found.	2021
	Ensure inspectors of construction sites are trained on child labor violations and that such training is coordinated with Ministry of Labor and Vocational Training's labor inspectorate.	2021
	Ensure the labor inspectorate conducts unannounced inspections as a matter of practice, not only when requests are made or violations are reported.	2021
	Establish and uniformly administer penalties for violations of laws on child labor, including its worst forms, in accordance with the parameters prescribed by law.	2009 – 2021
	Collect, properly store, and publicly release disaggregated data on labor and criminal law enforcement efforts, including labor inspectorate funding, initial training for new criminal investigators, routine inspections conducted, the number of prosecutions initiated, the number of convictions, and the number of penalties imposed for violations related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2021
	Ensure that malfeasance is addressed in all law enforcement agencies, including not accepting bribes to influence the outcome of cases or forging identity documents for trafficking in persons purposes, providing tip offs in advance of raids, and investigating and prosecuting politically connected individuals and government officials who are complicit in facilitating and profiting from the worst forms of child labor, including debt-based forced labor in brick kilns.	2019 – 2021
	Ensure that all criminal law enforcement officials are sufficiently trained on the techniques of how to conduct anti-trafficking work, particularly those located in rural areas and in brick kilns.	2019 – 2021
	Ensure that funding for criminal law enforcement agencies is sufficient to cover all expenses, including transportation costs, for law enforcement officials.	2019 – 2021
	Address the misuse of resources by law enforcement officials to convict defendants for politically motivated reasons, and ensure that all individuals accused of commercial sexual exploitation of children are prosecuted and charged according to the law.	2019 – 2021
	Protect and prevent intimidation of human trafficking victims and allow them access to protection services pending court proceedings.	2019 – 2021
Coordination	Ensure that the Commune Committees for Women and Children are able to carry out their intended mandate.	2019 – 2021
	Increase funding for the Commune Committees for Women and Children.	2016 – 2021
	Ensure that annual reports produced by the National Committee for Counter Trafficking are comprehensive.	2020 – 2021
	Improve inter-ministerial coordination by allowing ILO to participate in meetings of the National Committee on Countering Child Labor.	2021

Social Programs	Publish the results of the 2019 nationwide child labor survey.	2020 – 2021
	Strengthen child protection services, gatekeeping mechanisms, and the alternative care system to reduce the number of children unnecessarily placed in residential care and ensure that Residential Care Facilities and orphanages protect the health and well-being of children living in them.	2019 – 2021
	Increase access to free basic education by eliminating unofficial school-related fees; addressing issues related to limited transportation and inadequate school infrastructure, including the number of teachers, and the need for a birth certificate to enroll in school; eliminating barriers to school for children with disabilities; and providing safe, sanitary schools with access to water and latrines.	2013 – 2021
	Establish a system to accurately capture and monitor the reintegration of victims of the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking.	2019 – 2021
	Expand social protection safety nets in rural areas to ensure that poor children and their families have access to services that may mitigate the risk of involvement in child labor.	2016 – 2021
	Provide sufficient resources to all social programs so that they can fully address the extent of child labor in Cambodia, including online sexual exploitation of children.	2019 – 2021

In 2021, Cameroon made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government launched the "Zero Children in Gold Mines" program to address child labor in the gold mining sector. The government also convened meetings at the level of the technical secretariat for the Inter-Ministerial Committee on Trafficking in Persons, where it adopted an Operational Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants. However, children in Cameroon are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in the recruitment by non-state armed groups for use in conflict. Children also perform dangerous tasks in cocoa production and gold mining. In addition, the government has not addressed gaps in Cameroon's legal framework regarding the prohibition of use of children in illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs, and the prohibition of the recruitment of children under age 18 by non-state armed groups.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Cameroon are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in the recruitment by non-state armed groups for use in conflict. Children also perform dangerous tasks in cocoa production and gold mining. (1,2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Cameroon. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	43.7 (Unavailable)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	80.0
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	42.4
Primary Completion Rate (%)		65.5

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1,2,14,15)
	Recruitment of children by non-state armed groups for use in armed conflict, including suicide bombing, fighting, gathering intelligence, providing operational support as porters and cooks, and sexual slavery (1,2,14-16)
	Forced labor in agriculture in the production of cocoa, cotton, onions, and tea; fishing; livestock raising; domestic work; spare parts shops; artisanal gold mines and gravel quarries; street vending; and construction (1,6-8,13,17)
	Forced begging (1,2)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Cameroon is a source, transit, and destination country for child trafficking from neighboring countries in Central and West Africa, and child trafficking also occurs within Cameroon. (1,15) Children are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation, domestic work, and forced labor in mining and agriculture. (1,15) Parents often entrust children to intermediaries who promise to take them to urban centers for education or improved living conditions, and these children are often subject to exploitation. (1) In the artisanal mining sector in eastern Cameroon, children are subject to hazardous conditions, including frequent collapses of open pit mines and use of dangerous chemicals including mercury. The Government of Cameroon banned the presence of children at mining sites in August 2021, but research indicates that child labor continues to be widespread in the sector. (2,9,10,18,19)

Several crises within Cameroon and in neighboring countries have heightened children's vulnerability. (20) The crisis in the Northwest and Southwest regions began in 2016 as mass protests by lawyers and teachers, and it has since evolved into an armed separatist movement exacerbated by criminal opportunists taking advantage of the general insecurity in the two regions. Violence continued to escalate in the second half of 2021, and to date, the crisis has claimed an estimated 4,000 civilian lives and internally displaced approximately 573,000 people. (16,21,22) Nearly 2.2 million people are in need of humanitarian assistance due to the crisis in the Northwest and Southwest regions, including more than 1.2 million school-age children. Disruptions to family livelihoods as a result of the crisis place children at greater risk of human trafficking and child labor. (16) In Cameroon's Far North Region, the non-state armed group Boko Haram continued its insurgency, launching multiple attacks on civilians during the reporting period. Although the death of Boko Haram leader Abdubakar Shekau in May significantly diminished the capacity of the terrorist group to carry out attacks on civilians in the second half of the year, the Boko Haram insurgency remains a major humanitarian crisis, and more than 350,000 people have been internally displaced. (22,23) Cameroon also hosts nearly half a million refugees, primarily from the Central African Republic and Nigeria. Between refugees, asylum seekers, and IDPs, Cameroon, which has a population of 29.3 million people, is home to nearly 2 million displaced people. (22,24)

Children in Cameroon are subject to recruitment and use in non-state armed groups. (2) In 2021, in the Far North Region, Boko Haram and ISIS-West Africa recruited children to act as soldiers and suicide bombers. They also forcibly recruited children to act as porters, scouts, and cooks. (2) English-speaking separatist groups in the Northwest and Southwest regions have recruited and used children as fighters. (16) Anecdotal evidence suggests that some community neighborhood watch groups in the Far North Region, known as Vigilance Committees, may have incorporated children into their ranks. Vigilance Committees carry out reconnaissance operations against Boko Haram and ISIS-West Africa, and some vigilance committees receive non-lethal material support from the government. (1,2,15)

Ongoing violence in Cameroon and the surrounding regions has significantly disrupted children's schooling, making both Cameroonian and refugee children vulnerable to exploitation. Since 2016, armed separatist groups have violently enforced school boycotts, leading to long-term disruptions of education for children in the Northwest and Southwest regions. (16) Separatists frequently attacked and kidnapped students and teachers who attended classes, often releasing them only after collecting ransom. In 2021, approximately 700,000 children were not in school due to these boycotts, making them more vulnerable to child labor. (2,13,16) In addition, armed separatists have occupied and used schools as camps and bases for their operations. (16) Although the "Interim Government of Ambazonia," one of the largest separatist groups in Cameroon, allowed hundreds of schools to open for the first time in 5 years in August 2021, by November, the same organization announced a renewed school boycott. (16,25) In the Far North Region, terrorist activity by Boko Haram and ISIS-West Africa has also disrupted children's schooling. (2,20)

The government requires children to have identification documents, including birth certificates, to fully access education. Those without birth certificates often face difficulties registering for end-of-course examinations to enter secondary school. (2) Many public officials in the Northwest and Southwest regions have fled since the beginning of the crisis in those regions, reducing access to birth registration services. In addition, many internally displaced children lost their birth certificates as they fled the violence due to the Anglophone crisis and have been unable to participate in end-of-course examinations. (2) In September 2021, certain schools in the West Region refused to admit 700 internally displaced children into school due to their lack of documentation. (2) The law guarantees free education up to the age of 12, but in practice, additional school fees are often charged and families must pay the cost of books and uniforms, which is a significant barrier for many families. In the Far North region, for example, 61 percent of teachers are paid by parents. (2,26,27) In addition, at the secondary school level, students are responsible for the cost of tuition, additional fees, books, and uniforms, rendering secondary education unaffordable for many families. (27) Further barriers to education include inadequate school facility infrastructure, including toilets and sanitation facilities, and an insufficient number of teachers. (2,28)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Cameroon has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Cameroon's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the lack of prohibition of the use of children in illicit activities.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 2 of Order N° 17 on Child Labor; Section 86 of the Labor Code (29,30)

Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	No
Compulsory Education Age	No	12‡	Preamble of the Constitution; Articles 9 and 16 of the Law Orienting the Education System (36,37)
Free Public Education	No		Article 46-2 and Articles 47–48 of the Decree on the Organization of Public Schools (38)

* Country has no conscription (39)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (27)

Children in Cameroon are required to attend only 6 years of primary school, which typically concludes at age 12. This standard makes children ages 13 through 14 vulnerable to child labor because they are not required to attend school but are not legally permitted to work. (36,37) In addition, the Decree on the Organization of Public Schools provides for free schooling only through primary school, but basic education is a total of 9 years and includes three years of lower secondary school. The failure to provide for complete free basic education may increase the risk of children's involvement in the worst forms of child labor. (38) Human trafficking provisions do not meet international standards because they require threats, the use of force, or coercion to be established for the crime of child trafficking, and individuals ages 16 to 18 are not considered children for the purposes for trafficking in persons provisions. (31,32) In addition, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children under age 18 are not comprehensive, because work at dangerous heights and underwater is not prohibited. (30,40)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MINLSS)	Enforces labor laws, including those related to child labor; promotes decent working conditions, and leads the National Committee to Combat Child Labor (CNLCCTE). (41)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Prosecutes cases referred by the General Delegate for National Security or the Ministry of Defense's National Gendarmerie (SED), and contributes to investigations, as appropriate. (2,41)

Organization/Agency	Role
General Delegate for National Security	Operates as the national police service of Cameroon. Enforces laws against the worst forms of child labor and investigates violations in urban areas. (2,41) Through its Special Vice Squad, investigates cases of human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and other forms of abuse against women and children. Refers cases to MOJ or the Ministry of Defense for investigation by SED. (2,41) In the reporting period, coordinated with NGOs and a partner government to conduct trainings for law enforcement on identifying and assisting human trafficking victims. (1)
SED	Investigates cases of child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation in both urban and rural areas before referring cases to MOJ for prosecution. (2,41) Operates a reporting hotline for human trafficking cases. (2,41,42)

Although it does not play a direct role in enforcement, Cameroon's National Commission on Human Rights and Freedoms advises government ministries on the enforcement of laws related to child labor and advocates for sanctions as appropriate. (43,44)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Cameroon took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor and Social Security that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including insufficient financial resource allocation.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In January 2021, inspectors from the East Region Delegate of Social Affairs found that 605 children were subjected to child labor in 29 mining sites in the region. (2) The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Cameroon's workforce, which includes approximately 12 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Cameroon would need to employ about 797 labor inspectors, but it currently employs only 223. (2,45-47) Labor inspectors are not empowered to conduct inspections in the informal sector, in which the majority of child labor occurs. (2,48) The labor inspectorate lacked sufficient resources, including transportation, to carry out its mission. (2) In Cameroon's largest city, Douala, there were only 15 inspectors, which trade union leaders described as "totally inadequate" to inspect the thousands of workplaces in the city. (2,41) Government officials and NGOs in the East Region indicated that labor inspections rarely took place, especially at rural mining sites. (2)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Although the government has not created a formal mechanism for filing and responding to complaints about child labor, victims and their relatives can report directly to any of the institutions, including the Ministry of Social Affairs, the Ministry of Labor and Social Security, the State Defense Secretariat, and the Ministry of Justice. (2)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Cameroon took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including insufficient allocation of financial resources.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

The General Delegate for National Security reported that in 2021, 154 police officers received training on portions of the Penal Code related to trafficking in persons as part of a 12-month refresher course. (15) In addition, the National Gendarmerie introduced a module on organized crime, including trafficking of persons, including children, into the training curriculum for the Judicial Police Officers. (15) Law enforcement officers, however, did not receive training specifically addressing child labor, and criminal law enforcement agencies do not receive adequate funding to investigate the worst forms of child labor. (2,5,13,43) In 2013, the Ministry of Social Affairs and the IOM developed the National Referral System and Standard Operating Procedures to coordinate the identification and assistance of human trafficking victims, including children found to be in the worst forms of child labor. Research shows no evidence of relevant stakeholders using this system during the reporting period. (2)

Research did not uncover information about any individuals involved in ongoing prosecutions that began in previous reporting periods. (2) While the government of Cameroon did not compile comprehensive statistics on trafficking prosecutions, conservative estimates from the Inter-Ministerial Committee on Trafficking in Persons indicate that authorities investigated 93 cases of trafficking in persons; these estimates did not disaggregate the number of individuals involved in each case or the number of children subject to trafficking in persons. (41) During the reporting period, despite credible evidence that children were involved in the worst forms of child labor, there were no reported investigations of forced child labor or commercial sexual exploitation of children. (2)

During the reporting period, Cameroonian Police in the capital city of Yaoundé arrested members of a human trafficking network that bought and sold newborn babies. The trafficking network operations are believed to expand beyond Cameroon and include Gabon, Equatorial Guinea, and Chad. (49) In addition, in February, the gendarmerie in Limbé region, in the Southwest, arrested 7 suspects who were accused of subjecting 29 children between the ages of 7 and 14 to domestic servitude. The suspects were charged under Cameroon's child trafficking laws. (1) Due to concerns about child trafficking, border police work to ensure that children have parental authorization when crossing a border without a parent. (15) While there have been past reports that indicate the government has held children as young as age 5 in detention facilities for prolonged periods due to suspicion of being affiliated with Boko Haram, or to prevent them from being recruited into Boko Haram, there were no reports during the reporting period that the government detained or punished any children found engaged in child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation, illegal or illicit activities, or armed conflict. (2,44,50,51)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including the lack of resources to carry out mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee to Combat Child Labor	Coordinates government efforts to address child labor. Led by MINLSS, and includes representatives from other ministries and government bodies as well as representatives from civil society. (52) In 2021, CNLCTE undertook activities to operationalize the National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Cameroon, 2018–2025. (22)
Inter-Ministerial Committee on Trafficking in Persons	Coordinates government efforts to address human trafficking. Chaired by the Secretary General of the Office of the Prime Minister, and includes members of government ministries, law enforcement personnel, civil society organizations, and NGOs. (1,8,53) In 2021, the Government of Cameroon created the technical secretariat for the Inter-Ministerial Committee on Trafficking in Persons. The committee held two formal sessions to discuss anti-trafficking efforts, and it established four new committees in the East Region to address trafficking in persons. (2,15) In addition, members of the committee took a virtual training course on trafficking in persons and child exploitation. (22)
Ministry of Social Affairs (MINAS)	Coordinates efforts to address human trafficking. Coordinates the National Referral System and Standard Operating Procedures, a set of formal written procedures meant to guide officials across the government in the proactive identification of victims of human trafficking, including trafficked children. (8) Admits children subject to abuse, including child trafficking survivors, into government-run institutions that provide shelter, food, medical care, education, vocational training, and family tracing. Conducts public awareness campaigns on human trafficking. (1,15) In 2021, MINAS earmarked $82,000 (49 million CFA) to improve child protection. Its Child Protection Focal Team held a 3-day workshop for officials on child protection issues. (22) In collaboration with the Ministries of Basic Education and Secondary Education, it also launched a campaign, "We Ring the Bell," aimed to promote educational access for children with disabilities. (2) In addition, MINAS launched a new shelter for returning migrants, including human trafficking survivors, which includes dormitory space for up to 21 women and children. (15) Finally, it provided support, including school placement assistance and food, to 39,518 children from internally displaced families. (15)

A lack of resources, the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic, and socio-political unrest and insecurity in the Far North, Northwest, and Southwest regions continued to hamper coordination efforts to address trafficking in persons and the worst forms of child labor. (2,15) Research indicates that the National Committee to Combat Child Labor has not made significant progress because of a lack of dedicated resources. There is also evidence to suggest that each of the government agencies represented in the committee looked for its own funding and initiated its own activities without significant coordination. (13) Various agencies and branch offices responsible for investigating and prosecuting cases of trafficking in persons did not provide full reports to the Inter-Ministerial Committee on Trafficking in Persons. (15)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including the lack of a policy specifically dedicated to addressing child labor.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
NDS30 National Development Strategy (2020–2030)	Incorporates the reduction of poverty, improved access to basic services, and the elimination of child labor into the national development strategy. The strategy specifically calls for improved legal frameworks to address the worst forms of child labor; universal primary education enrollment and completion, and eventually, free education through 10 years of schooling. (54) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement NDS30 National Development Strategy (2020–2030) during the reporting period.
Operational Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants (2021–2023)†	Focuses on addressing trafficking in persons, including child trafficking. Objectives include raising awareness, improving the provision of services to human trafficking survivors, increasing prosecution of traffickers, enhancing data collection, and coordinating execution of anti-trafficking efforts. (55) Includes the goals of identifying and suppressing forced child labor and the commercial sexual exploitation of children. (55) During the reporting period, the plan was extended by two more years, through to the end of 2023. (15) The government also conducted several awareness-raising campaigns and provided funding to several agencies to carry out anti-trafficking activities. In addition, the government began work, in cooperation with the UNODC and the IOM, to revise its 2011 anti-trafficking law. (15)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2018, the Government of Cameroon drafted a National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Cameroon, 2018–2025. Although the government has yet to formally adopt this plan, in 2021, various government ministries began to deliberate and allocate funding to implement the plan's activities. (22,48,56) Cameroon is a member of the Alliance 8.7 program, an inclusive global partnership committed to achieving Target 8.7 of the 2030 Sustainable Development Goals. Target 8.7 seeks, among other objectives, to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labor. (13,57)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Project to Fight the Phenomenon of Street Children (Project 559)†	In conjunction with the National Employment Fund, this MINAS-funded program provides street children with health care, education, and psychosocial care, and supports the reintegration of street children by providing vocational training opportunities at the Betamba Childhood Institute. (2,5,43,58) In the reporting year, at least 51 street children received services through this program. (2)
Support Project in Quality Management for Cocoa and Coffee Production/Forever Chocolate (2019–2025)†	Promotes labor standards in the cocoa industry, including the elimination of child labor. (7) Implemented by NGO association Enfant Jeunesse Avenir , in partnership with Cameroon's largest cocoa processor, Cameroon Cacao Industrial Corporation. Key stakeholders of the project include government ministries such as the Ministry of Health, MINAS, the Ministry of Women Empowerment and the Family, MINLSS, and the Ministry of Basic Education. (7) The project is implemented in cocoa production basins using the Farmer Field School Extension Approach and is aimed at training cocoa farmers to produce cocoa that is free of child labor and utilizes environmentally friendly techniques. (7) The project provides services to children at risk of child labor, including school fee exemptions, school kits, and health services. The project also seeks to empower women and provide families with alternative sources of income to limit the involvement of children in child labor. (2) In addition, the project includes monitoring and remediation systems aimed at ensuring the traceability of cocoa supply chains and eliminating child labor. (2) The project continued in 2021. (2)
Support Program for the Reform of Education in Cameroon (2018–2026)†	$130 million project implemented by the Ministry of Basic Education with lending from the World Bank. Promotes access to basic education, especially in disadvantaged areas. (59) At the beginning of the 2021–2022 school year, the government began providing $1,600 (800,000 CFA) donations to 1,000 schools in the East Region, Adamawa Region, North Region, and Far North Region. (2) In addition, the project provided 2.5 million school textbooks to 13,000 primary schools, reducing schooling costs for parents with the aim of decreasing school dropout rates. (2)
Zero Children in Gold Mines† *	Project implemented by the state-owned National Mining Corporation, SONAMINES, to eliminate child labor in gold mining in the East Region, where there are more than 300 gold mining sites. During the reporting period, the project distributed money and educational materials to children, and promised to financially support the education of former child laborers who left the mines and returned to school. (2,15)
United States Government Programs (non-DOL)	$27 million U.S. Department of Agriculture-funded McGovern-Dole International Food for Education and Child Nutrition Program, implemented by Nascent Solutions in cooperation with the Ministry of Basic Education, which improves literacy and nutrition in primary schools. During the reporting period, in collaboration with the Ministry of Basic Education, the program equipped 148 school libraries, distributed 100,000 books in the Adamawa, East, and North Regions, and provided 48,000 books to 58 schools in the Northwest Region through mobile libraries. (2,5) To encourage school attendance, the program also provided 2,209 metric tons of food for more than 170,000 students, and distributed "take home rations" to students in their final 2 years of primary school who attended school regularly. (2)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Cameroon.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (2)

Although the government has implemented programs to improve education access and address child labor in mining, street work, and cocoa production, research suggests that the scope of current programs is insufficient to address the extent of the problem due to limited resources and insufficient geographic coverage. (2)

Government-run centers can temporarily house survivors of human trafficking and the worst forms of child labor, but space is limited. (53,61) NGOs also provide shelter and assistance to survivors of child trafficking and labor exploitation. (13) These include the Network for Human Rights Defenders in Central Africa, which provides housing and temporary assistance; the Kumba-based Survival Network, which provides shelter and scholarships to two survivors; and the Justice and Peace Commission of the Bamenda Catholic archdiocese in the Northwest Region, which assists IDPs. However, these organizations did not share an exact number of participants. (13)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT REGRESSION IN PRACTICE THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In 2021, the Central African Republic made minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Parliament passed legislation authorizing the ratification of the International Labor Organization Convention 190 on Violence and Harassment, which reaffirms the fundamental principles and rights at work, including the effective abolition of child labor. The government also created an alert system for reporting child labor violations. However, despite new initiatives to address child labor, the Central African Republic is assessed as having made only minimal advancement because it implemented a practice that delays advancement to eliminate child labor. Government security forces recruited children for support roles and coordinated with an armed group that recruited and used children in armed conflict. Children in the Central African Republic are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including recruitment and use in armed conflict and forced labor in diamond mining, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also engage in child labor in agriculture and domestic work. Other gaps remain, as the Central African Republic does not meet the international standard for minimum age protections since the law does not cover children working in the informal sector.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Central African Republic are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in recruitment and use in armed conflict and forced labor in diamond mining, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also engage in child labor in agriculture and domestic work. (1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the Central African Republic.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	30.8 (Unavailable)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	68.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	39.7

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Forced labor of indigenous Ba’aka children in farming (13)
	Commercial sexual exploitation (1,2)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in the Central African Republic are subjected to recruitment and use by non-state armed groups. (1,2) The government and 14 armed groups signed the Political Agreement for Peace and Reconciliation in the Central African Republic (APPR) in 2019. (14,15) The APPR called for the immediate cessation of recruitment of child soldiers by all parties involved in the conflict. (15) However, the armed groups’ attempted overthrow of the government following the December 2020 elections stalled implementation of the APPR. (1,10,9) In December 2020, major rebel groups formed the Coalition des Patriotes pour le Changement in response to the country’s constitutional court finding ex-president Francois Bozizé ineligible to be a presidential candidate in the December 2020 election due to his documented history of human rights abuses. Anti-Balaka-affiliated armed groups and ex-Séléka factions—including the Front Populaire pour la Renaissance de la Centrafrique; Mouvement des Libérateurs Centrafricains pour la Justice; Mouvement Patriotique pour la Centrafrique; Unité pour la Paix en Centrafrique; and unaffiliated elements—continued to recruit children in greater numbers as combatants, informants, cooks, and sex slaves. (1,2) In 2021, the UN Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in CAR (MINUSCA) child rights division verified and documented the recruitment and use of 316 children (254 boys and 62 girls) by all parties to the conflict, including the Russian-supported Wagner Group forces, the Central African Armed Forces (FACA), and a variety of non-state armed groups. (1) Eight children were identified as being used by government and pro-government forces to support checkpoints and run errands, including by FACA, FACA/Forces de Sécurité Intérieure (FSI), and by Wagner Group personnel working in cooperation with the government. (16,17) Wagner forces also reportedly forced a child to gather intelligence against an armed group. (18,17) In addition, media reports indicated that in December 2021, Wagner Group and FACA forces used forced child labor to do construction and improvements on a Wagner military base. (19,20)

Armed groups and criminal elements, including in some pastoralist groups, subjected children to forced domestic servitude and commercial sexual exploitation. (2,10,21) In some instances, relatives or family friends exploited children to generate additional income. (1,10) Girls may be trafficked into forced domestic work, especially in rural areas in which government presence is limited or non-existent. In maisons de joie (“houses of joy”), girls as young as age 13 are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation. (1,2) Maisons de joie are typically private residences at which alcohol and food are served to middle and upper-class customers. (1,2) Children in rural areas are forced to work in artisanal diamond and gold mines, often for long hours and without protective equipment. They are exposed to hazardous chemicals, including silver nitrate, and suffer from injuries and waterborne diseases. (1,9)

In 2021, ongoing civil conflict in the Central African Republic increased child vulnerability to labor exploitation. An estimated 2.8 million people, including 1.3 million children, required humanitarian assistance during the reporting period. (22) At least 100,000 IDPs were directly linked to post-electoral violence, and the Central African Republic’s IDP population ballooned to 681,930, half of whom were children. (14,22-25) Displacement and chronic food insecurity are aggravating risk factors for child labor and commercial sexual exploitation of children. (1,2,22)

Fewer than 60 percent of children in the Central African Republic complete their primary school education, and only 6 percent graduate from secondary school. (10,26) The combined effects of resurgent violence throughout the country, structural fragility, and the pandemic have exacerbated this trend. The loss of income has compelled children to seek employment or remain at home. (1,22,27-30) The pandemic has also disrupted reintegration and rehabilitation services for survivors of armed group recruitment. (30)

During the reporting year, most of the country's schools were closed for several months as a result of military operations. (22) Although state security forces have extended their presence through most of the national territory since February 2021, government and rebel forces frequently trade control of territory in many parts of the country. (1) As a result, most schools remained closed. Other barriers to education include displacement due to conflict and the occupation of some school buildings by armed groups, including Wagner forces. (1) Children also continue to experience difficulties accessing education due to school fees, an absence of teachers, security concerns, destruction or looting of school materials and buildings by armed groups, and the unavailability of schools, especially in rural areas or IDP camps. (9,12,29,31,32)

The Central African Republic's 2020 Child Protection Code (CPE) provided free birth registration for all children. (33) However, the country's birth registration rate, stymied by endemic poverty and administrative collapse, remains one of the lowest in Africa. (34) The government also failed to fully implement this provision of the law, and many municipal governments continue to levy fees on birth registration and other vital records. (1) Despite this provision, the Family Code and a Presidential Decree mandate that schools will only accept children with documented proof of identity, such as a birth record/certificate. Based on this legal requirement, undocumented children were denied access to education and other social services. (1,10) Moreover, in 2021, members of a minority Muslim population who lost identification documents while fleeing intra-communal violence or internal conflict faced discrimination when trying to obtain new identification documents. As a result, many were left undocumented and unable to register for school. (1) Nevertheless, the Ministry of Education has attempted to improve access to education by providing free school admission to children from IDP camps, waiving school exam fees for children affected by conflict, and expanding programs to provide birth registration, which may be required for school enrollment. (9,11,35)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

The Central African Republic has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in the Central African Republic's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the minimum age for work.

* Country has no conscription (40,43)

The Presidential Minister Counselor for Child Protection worked with the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to draft a Trafficking in Persons law. The bill, which was submitted to the National Assembly for a vote in 2022, will add an additional element to the legal framework prohibiting commercial sexual exploitation of children. (1,19) Separately, in September, Law 21.003 was adopted. This legislation authorized the government to ratify ILO Convention 190, which includes protections for domestic workers. (1)

Although the Labor Code prohibits work by children under age 14, the law does not apply to children outside of formal employment relationships. This fails to meet international standards, which require the protection of all children under minimum age for work laws. (36,44) A draft revision of the Labor Code is pending before the National Assembly. This revised code would raise the minimum age of employment, although it does not address the minimum age for hazardous work. (1) However, under Article 260 of the Labor Code, labor inspectors may require a physician to examine a child to verify whether the work for which they are charged exceeds his or her strength. (1)

The Central African Republic has not determined by national law or regulation the types of hazardous work prohibited for children. (1,9,36,45) Moreover, the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, which may encourage children to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. (33,36) Research was unable to locate original copies of laws establishing the compulsory education age at 15. (33,42)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Monitors and enforces laws related to child labor through its General Directorate of Labor and Social Welfare and seven regional labor directorates. (1,7,36)
The Juvenile Court	Established under the 2020 Child Protection Code (CPE) to field all cases involving the health, safety, morals, and education of children. Maintains sole jurisdiction over criminal cases involving juvenile plaintiffs, defendants, witnesses, and victims of crime, including former child soldiers. (33) The court also oversees a special police unit for children, which is responsible for monitoring children's safety and welfare in industrial or mining areas. (33,40) This unit is also responsible for identifying criminal offenses against children. The judges are responsible for working with the police, the child protection brigade, the Children's Prosecutor, and social workers to refer child victims and monitor compliance with diversion measures. (33,36)
Internal Security Forces Police and Gendarmes	Enforce all laws, including those related to the worst forms of child labor. Child Protection Units, under the expanded jurisdiction of the juvenile court system, are responsible for identifying criminal offenses against children. (33,44)
Ministry of Justice	Protects children through its Rapid Response for Child Protection team and prosecutes cases involving the worst forms of child labor through its courts and tribunals. (35,46)
Special Criminal Court	Investigates serious human rights abuses committed since 2003, including the use of children in armed conflict. Hybrid court includes international and national judges and prosecutors. (47,48)
Mixed Unit for Rapid Intervention and Repression of Sexual Violence (UMIRR)	Aims to suppress sexual violence against women and children, including child trafficking. Includes representatives from the Ministry of Social Affairs (MSA); the Ministry of Justice; and law enforcement (gendarmerie and police). (1,19,21,35) Operates a 24-hour hotline to report cases and provides social services to survivors of human trafficking. (1,19) Operates in Bangui, the capital city, and Bouar, a town in the northwestern part of the country. (19) Falls under the joint authority of the Ministry of Justice and the Ministry of Public Security, and is part of a state organization supporting investigations into conflict-related sexual violence. Refers cases to the ordinary court system or to the Special Criminal Court. (21,49)

Due to ongoing violence and the operation of non-state armed rebel groups, the government did not control a significant amount of its territory during the reporting period. This restricted the geographic reach of the enforcement agencies' operations. (19)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, the exceptionally low number of worksite inspections conducted at the national level in the Central African Republic may have impeded the enforcement of child labor laws (Table 6).

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT REGRESSION IN PRACTICE THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Labor inspectors received training on a new law authorizing implementation of ILO Convention 190, and on the CPE. An additional 40 inspectors, including 7 regional labor directors, underwent additional training under the auspices of the African Regional Training Center for Labor Administration. (1) During the reporting period, the government created an "alert" system for reporting child labor violations. This mechanism is linked to the Ministry of Labor (MOL), the Mixed Unit for Rapid Intervention and Repression of Sexual Violence (UMIRR), the Ministry for the Protection of Women, Gender, and Protection of the Child, and the Ministry of Social Affairs (MSA). (1) In addition, UNICEF worked with the Ministry of Social Welfare to establish a child welfare case management standard operating procedure. (1)

Nevertheless, the budget allocated to labor inspectorates decreased significantly during the reporting period. (1) Inadequate financial and material resources, including transportation, office facilities and supplies, and computers, hindered the government's efforts to address child labor. (1,35,50) Moreover, the passage of Decree No. 12.177 in 2012 effectively removed regional labor directorates from the general directorate's chain of command. Thus, regional directorates are no longer required to submit periodic reports on inspection activities, as required under ILO C. 81. (51) Moreover, civil unrest prevented labor inspectors outside Bangui from visiting artisanal mining sites. (1) In 2021, the labor inspectorate conducted 28 inspections. The exceptionally low number of worksite inspections conducted in the Central African Republic may have impeded the enforcement of child labor laws. (1) Labor inspectors often do not issue formal penalties or sanctions, with community reconciliation remaining the principle avenue for mediation. (10,36)

The MOL is supposed to work with other ministries and UNICEF to provide assistance to victims of child labor, including its worst forms. Due to a lack of resources, the government relies primarily on MINUSCA, NGOs, and UNICEF to provide social services to survivors. (12,52-54)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in the Central African Republic took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including insufficient allocation of human resources.

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021

In 2021, UMIRR brought charges against an alleged human trafficker in the Bimbo Criminal Court in Bangui. The alleged trafficker was tried and found guilty of child trafficking. (19) This was the Central African Republic's first completed prosecution and conviction of a human trafficking crime. While the law provides a prison sentence of five-to-ten years for trafficking in persons, the convicted trafficker received a suspended sentence of one year in prison. (19) UMIRR is also currently investigating the case of a customs official accused of trafficking in persons, including the trafficking of 11 girls for commercial sexual exploitation. (19) The government did not provide information on its criminal law enforcement efforts for inclusion in this report. (1)

The CPE created specialized children's police units to monitor industrial or mining areas for hazardous conditions. (10,33,55) The CPE also broadens social protections and creates new enforcement mechanisms for cases of sexual exploitation, forced labor, or human trafficking; and includes provisions for at-risk groups such as demobilized child soldiers, children of religious and ethnic minorities, and non-residents. (9,21,33) Under the law, children associated with armed groups were entitled to state social protection services and immunity from prosecution. (9,33,56) The country's criminal court partnered with international organizations to establish a mechanism to refer victims of child soldiering to welfare services instead of prison. (1) As of October 2021, however, five former child soldiers were detained in the Ngaragba prison, as the government was unable to find alternative holding and rehabilitation centers. Two were detained in 2019, one in 2020, and two in July and August 2021. (1)

During the reporting period, the government took steps to implement the CPE by developing cross-sectoral plans to incorporate elements of the code on various sectors including justice, social welfare, birth registration, and education. As part of this effort, the Ministries of Education and Social Welfare are developing a child protection code of conduct for teachers and other personnel. (1) However, limited resources and technical capacity, coupled with ongoing violence, slowed implementation of the law. (1) The 2020 Trafficking in Persons National Action Plan extends UMIRR's authority to include human trafficking, and UMIRR has investigated and referred cases to the High Court of Bangui. (21) Despite limited funding, UMIRR continuously investigated and referred the victims of gender-based violence to psychosocial assistance, though no convictions were reported. (56) During the reporting period, the MOL and World Vision hosted a workshop and training on identifying and protecting children from the worst forms of child labor. Participants included Ministry of Defense personnel from the Central African Armed Forces and UMIRR, and Ministry of the Interior personnel, including 16 police and gendarmerie units. (1) In addition, the government worked with NGOs to provide 12 trainings on trafficking in persons for officials from UMIRR and the Ministries of Disarmament and Demobilization; Defense; Foreign Affairs; Mining and Geology; Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises; Labor; Youth; Gender; and Communications. (19) UMIRR operated a reporting hotline for victims of human trafficking. (13,57)

There is approximately 1 police officer for every 1,300 Central Africans. Government authority is largely absent outside the capital, and many security forces outside Bangui may lack the resources and knowledge to enforce the law, including a lack of access to copies of relevant laws. (10,56) Moreover, judicial authorities lack the staff and resources to conduct investigations outside Bangui. (13,58) The non-enforcement of the law remains a problem. Instead, judges used mediation as a recourse to alternative dispute resolution. (10) Cases were widely resolved outside of formal legal proceedings due to a lack of public trust, access, or knowledge about the justice system. (58)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including a lack of coordinating mechanisms that include all worst forms of child labor.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Presidency: Disarmament, Demobilization, Reintegration, and Rehabilitation (DDRR) Coordinating body (UNPDDRR)	With the assistance of UNICEF and other partner organizations, includes activities under the Office of the Presidency to disarm, demobilize, and reintegrate children used in armed conflict back into community life. (19,21) Coordinates child protection components of DDRR through the government's Presidential Minister Counselor for Child Protection. (19) During the reporting period, UNPDDRR's child protection unit identified child soldiers and oversaw UN-funded community-based integration programs. (19)
National Interministerial Committee to Combat Human Trafficking	Coordinates drafting and implementation of the Central African Republic's National Trafficking in Persons Strategy and the National Action Plan to Address Trafficking. (10,21) Includes a "Coordination Office" led by the president and including representatives from key ministries, including MOL. (19) National Inter-Ministerial Committee met twice per month, and the members of the Coordination Office met twice per week. The National Interministerial Committee also drafted an 18-month National Action Plan Against Trafficking in Persons that is scheduled to be adopted and commenced in 2022. (19)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Ministry of Social Affairs (MSA)	Refers victims of child trafficking to NGOs and maintains an orphanage for children at risk of child trafficking. (10,46) Oversees child soldier reintegration and leads the government's anti-trafficking policy efforts through the National Council on Child Protection. In 2021, removed 33 children from a prostitution ring in Bangui, and provided them with counseling, life-skills training, and vocational training. (1)
Country Task Force for Monitoring Grave Violations of Children's Rights	National-level committee that meets twice per year at the strategic level and four times per year at the technical level to address children's rights, including the worst forms of child labor. (10) Research was unable to determine whether this coordinating body was active during the reporting period.
Provincial Child Protection Working Groups	Regional government bodies that work to protect children from all violations, including the worst forms of child labor. (10,57) Research was unable to determine whether these working groups were active during the reporting period.

While the government has established mechanisms to address some of the worst forms of child labor—including human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and children in armed conflict—these efforts do not extend to other sectors, such as mining, in which child labor is prevalent. (1,12,56)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including a lack of coverage of all forms of child labor.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Political Agreement for Peace and Reconciliation in the Central African Republic (APPR)	Peace agreement signed by 14 armed groups and the Transitional Government in February 2019. Includes provisions to end the recruitment and use of children by armed groups, and to facilitate the separation of children from their ranks. (15,52,54) Armed groups listed by the UN for grave violations against children have signed Action Plans to implement these commitments. (59-61) The Action Plans cover the four areas for which the groups are listed, including (1) recruitment and use of children, (2) killing and maiming, (3) rape and other forms of sexual violence, and (4) attacks on schools and hospitals. (59-61) The Mouvement Patriotique pour la Centrafrique has appointed four commanders to serve as child protection focal points in areas under its control. (52,59) However, the UN Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in CAR (MINUSCA) reported that armed groups continued to recruit child soldiers during the reporting period despite their pledges. (1) Political violence and resource constraints hindered the APPR's progress during the reporting year. (1)
Child Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration Policy	Based on the 2015 Bangui Forum, aims to facilitate initiatives to disarm, demobilize, and reintegrate child soldiers, in cooperation with UN agencies, other ministries, and armed groups. (7,10,43) Through its National Strategy for Community-Based Reintegration of Children Formerly Associated with Armed Forces and Armed Groups, provides temporary care to children separated from armed groups and establishes Community Child Protection Networks throughout the country. (10,62) During the reporting period, UNICEF and partners helped the government demobilize and reintegrate 1,468 child soldiers who were liberated from armed groups. (1) In addition, some armed groups who previously signed action plans to end gross child rights violations continued to work with the UN to facilitate the release of children. (1)
National Strategy to Fight Gender-Based Violence in CAR (2018–2021)	Aimed to achieve "zero tolerance" for gender-based violence, including commercial sexual exploitation. (10,62) Written by MSA, in partnership with the UN Population Fund, UNHCR, UNICEF, and UN Women. (10,63) As part of the policy, the government operated a shelter for survivors of gender-based violence, the House of Hope ( Maison de l'Espoir ), in 2020. (56) Research was unable to determine what activities were undertaken as part of this policy during the reporting year.
National Recovery and Peacebuilding Plan (2017–2021)	Aimed to re-establish peace and security. Supported reconciliation by disarming and reintegrating children associated with armed groups, promoting legal reform, seeking justice for victims, and improving access to education. (10,11,43,62) During the reporting period, the government and its partners continued to implement this policy, holding multiple coordination meetings with partners. (1)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (62)

During the reporting period, the resurgence of violence hindered the ability of the government to implement existing policies throughout its territory. (1) Research found no evidence of a policy on other forms of child labor, such as in mining or domestic work. In addition, a draft of a national policy addressing the elimination of child labor has yet to be adopted. (45,46)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of programs to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
UNICEF Programs	Coordinate the removal of children from forced labor situations and provide necessary social services for their rehabilitation, enrollment in schools or vocational training programs, and placement in stable homes. Provide basic education and vocational skills training to children who were most at risk for child labor exploitation and armed group recruitment. (10,24) Support shelters that provide immediate care, food, and psychosocial support to vulnerable children and former child soldiers. (18) In 2021, 114,118 children and their caregivers accessed psychosocial support through UNICEF-supported Child Friendly Spaces (CFS) and other community-level outreach activities. CFS were placed in areas where children were most affected by crises, such as IDP camps. (1) Moreover, 1,289 community volunteers working in CFS were trained in 2021 on the minimum standards on mental health and psychosocial assistance to children in humanitarian settings. (1)
Shelters for Unaccompanied Children†	MSA and UNICEF-supported centers that provide immediate care, food, and psychosocial support to vulnerable children and former child soldiers. (64) In 2021, UNICEF supported a host family program supporting vulnerable children and former child soldiers. (1)
Birth Registration Campaign†	Aims to provide birth registration to children in the Central African Republic in accordance with the CPE. During the reporting year, the Civil Registration Directorate organized a workshop with 25 mayors on birth registration provisions of the CPE. (1) UNICEF printed and distributed birth certificates in support of the civil registration office. Due to these efforts, the civil registration office documented 25,126 children in 2021, a 10 percent increase from the previous year. (1)

† Program is partially funded by the Government of the Central African Republic.

The absence of resources and government authority throughout much of the country significantly hindered the government's ability to address child labor. (1) Coordination with non-government actors to support children used in armed conflict and the scope of programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. (35,68) Due to a lack of funding and persistent insecurity, as much as 25 percent of children released since 2014 have not received reintegration support. (23,69) Research found no evidence that the government has programs to assist children engaged in other worst forms of child labor, such as in mining or commercial sexual exploitation. (1)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

In 2021, Chad made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government created a National Referral Mechanism that outlines standard operating procedures for suspected cases of trafficking in persons, including those involving children. In addition, the government created a Multi-sectoral Technical Committee Against Migrant Smuggling and Human Trafficking and with the assistance of the International Organization for Migration, provided training on trafficking in persons to judicial officials. However, children in Chad are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including forced labor in cattle herding and domestic work. In addition, the government did not provide sufficient data on law enforcement efforts and has no active policies to address child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Chad are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including forced labor in cattle herding and domestic work. (1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Chad. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	45.8 (Unavailable)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	39.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		40.6

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicators Cluster Survey (MICS 6), 2019. (5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In the Lake Chad region, human trafficking networks exploit children in fisheries, and traffickers in rural areas sell children in markets for use in cattle or camel herding. (1,2,10) Human traffickers exploit children in forced labor as beggars in urban areas, agricultural laborers on farms, gold miners in the north of the country, laborers in charcoal production, and as domestic workers. (2,10) Child herders, some of whom are victims of forced labor, follow traditional routes for grazing cattle and may cross ill-defined borders across the Sahel. (2,10) Domestically, boys sent to Koranic schools, or mouhadjirin, may be forced to beg and surrender the money they receive to their teachers. (1-3,10) Girls travelling to larger towns in search of work may be subjected to commercial sexual exploitation or domestic servitude. In addition, Nigerian terrorist groups Boko Haram and Islamic State-West Africa Province forcibly abduct minors to serve as child soldiers, suicide bombers, child brides, and forced laborers. (2)

As of the end of 2021, Chad hosted more than 550,000 refugees and asylum seekers, the second largest per capita population in Africa. More than half of all refugees were children. (1,2,10-15) The Boko Haram insurgency, flooding, and multiple epidemics have internally displaced 406,573 Chadians. (15-18) From August to December 2021, an estimated 105,088 Cameroonian refugees entered Chad after the outbreak of intercommunal conflict in Cameroon's Far North region. An estimated 88 percent of these refugees are women and children. (15) Children in Chad's refugee and IDP communities are vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking due to their economic instability and lack of access to support systems. (2,10,16,17)

Both the Constitution and the Law Orienting the Education System mandate free and compulsory education in Chad. (19,20) Moreover, Chad was the first country in the region to integrate its network of refugee schools into the national education system; these schools are fully accredited and receive state funding. (21) While basic education is free by law, some schools require additional payment for textbooks and for supplemental fees. (1,22) Other barriers to education include shortages of schools, classrooms, and teachers. In addition, some schools do not offer all grade levels. (1)

Girls experience significantly higher dropout rates than boys, and children with disabilities may be unable to attend school altogether. (23,24) Moreover, birth certificates may be required for enrollment in school; although this rule is not consistently enforced, especially in rural areas. (1) Only 12 percent of children nationwide are registered at birth, with some areas experiencing birth registration rates as low as 5 percent. (25)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Chad has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention		Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Chad's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the lack of prohibition against the use of children in illicit activities.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 9 of the Law Orienting the Education System; Article 35 of the Constitution (19,20)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (19)

As the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, children may be encouraged to leave school before completion of compulsory education. (19,20,26,27)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Service, Employment, and Social Dialogue (MOPS)	Oversees Chad's labor inspectorate and enforces child labor laws. (8) Administers a directorate charged with addressing the worst forms of child labor, and maintains a specific point of contact to assist in coordinating child protection and human trafficking issues. (8)
Ministry of Justice, Human Rights, and Guardian of the Seal (MOJ)	Drafts and enforces laws and coordinates efforts to protect human rights. Through its Directorate for Protection and Legal Monitoring of Children, enforces laws related to child labor and child trafficking. (8,10)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Organization/Agency	Role
National Police's Child Protection Brigade (CPB)	Enforces and investigates allegations of child exploitation, including human trafficking and the worst forms of child labor. (1,2,10) Evacuates children to its headquarters in N'Djamena, from where they may be moved to Ministry of Women and Childhood Protection (MWCP) temporary shelters in Koundoul. (8) Includes 100 "focal points" spread throughout all 23 provinces. These focal points are not trained investigators, but they are responsible for coordinating investigations with hub offices and referring allegations to investigators. (1,10) CPB or other local authorities notify MOJ's Directorate for Protection and Legal Monitoring of Children, UNICEF, and local NGOs when there is a case of child trafficking or abuse. (10) Allegations may be submitted directly by the public or by MWCP, MOPS, or MOJ. The government's regional child protection technical committees also identify and refer child trafficking victims to CPB. (1) CPB is active in Chad's largest cities (N'Djamena, Moundou, Sarh, Mongo, Mao, and Abéché). (10) However, research indicates that CPB is not well known by the public, thus limiting its impact. (1)

Labor Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether labor law enforcement agencies in Chad took actions to address child labor.

In addition to 36 full-time inspectors, the Ministry of Public Service, Employment, and Social Dialogue (MOPS) employs 50 labor controllers who act in an advisory role (but are unable to conduct inspections themselves). (1,9) However, the number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Chad's workforce, which includes approximately 5.3 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed countries, Chad would need to employ about 133 labor inspectors. (1,35,36) Chad does not maintain a central database for routine inspections, including child labor violations. In addition, the government did not provide information on its labor law enforcement efforts for inclusion in this report. (1) In Chad, child labor complaints are supposed to be received by the police, who are then supposed to refer the complaints to the Child Protection Brigade. This referral mechanism does not route cases to the labor inspectorate, nor is there another mechanism through which MOPS may receive child labor complaints directly. (1)

Ongoing austerity measures, exacerbated by the COVID-19 pandemic, along with regular changes of Ministers hindered the government's ability to conduct labor inspections. (1) Labor inspectors lacked sufficient resources, including transportation, to conduct investigations outside the city in which they are based. (1) Research indicates that the informal sector, in which many children work, is also largely unmonitored. (1,3)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether criminal law enforcement agencies in Chad took actions to address child labor.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Unknown (9)	No (1)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Unknown (9)	N/A (1)

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (9)	Unknown (1)

In the reporting period, the Government of Chad released a National Referral Mechanism (NRM) that outlines standard operating procedures for suspected cases of trafficking in persons, including those involving children. The NRM is designed to improve identification of trafficking in persons by law enforcement; coordinate relevant entities; and ensure effective victim protection and assistance, including the provision of social services. (1,10) The NRM manual also outlines victims' rights, including safe accommodation and medical, psychological, and legal assistance. (10)

The government does not maintain a centralized criminal records database. All criminal records are handwritten, and hard copies are stored at courts and regional tribunals. (1) The government did not provide clear information on its criminal law enforcement efforts for inclusion in this report. (1) No trainings were held for police or gendarmes officials in 2021, reportedly due to the impact of the pandemic. (1) The Ministry of Justice, with IOM assistance, did begin some training on trafficking in persons for judicial officials during the reporting period. (10) Despite this, many judicial officials remain unaware of Chad's laws on trafficking in persons, including the 2018 President's Ordinance on Trafficking in Persons. (10)

Civil society organizations typically assist with providing temporary shelter, legal assistance, and family reintegration services; they also track prosecutions and convictions. (2) Due to the economic impact of the pandemic, the Government of Chad reduced criminal law enforcement budgets during the reporting period. (1) Resource constraints, including lack of electricity and Internet at judicial facilities and erratic and insufficient funding allocations pose barriers to criminal investigation and prosecution. (1,2,10) In addition, cases of the worst forms of child labor are often not prosecuted under criminal law. For example, in trafficking cases involving children working as herders, local officials or NGO lawyers have negotiated settlements with employers for damages or fulfillment of contract terms on behalf of survivors' families. (9) Furthermore, child victims may be housed with their traffickers due to a lack of available service providers. (37)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including lack of funding to carry out mandates.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Working Group on the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Coordinates government efforts on child trafficking, provides training, conducts awareness-raising activities, and strengthens the network of government organizations that address human trafficking. Chaired by MWCP Child Protection Directorate and includes representatives from four other ministries, including MOPS. (1) Research was unable to determine whether the committee was active during the reporting period. (1)
Interministerial Committee on Child Soldiers	Coordinates government efforts to eliminate the use of children in armed conflict and address the worst forms of child labor. Located in each of the eight military regions and includes representatives from the government, army, gendarmerie, and civil society organizations. (1) Conducts awareness-raising activities and training in the military. (1) A child soldiers task force comprising UNICEF; the Ministry of Defense; MOJ; and MWCP, periodically screen recruitment pools for minimum age requirement violations. (1) Research was unable to determine whether the committee was active during the reporting period. (1)
Ministry of Women and Childhood Protection (MWCP)	Protects children's rights, provides temporary shelter to victims, and assists with reintegration when appropriate. Through its Child Protection Directorate, leads government efforts on child protection, including from child labor, and liaises with the Child Protection Directorate at MOJ. (1,10) With UNICEF and local NGO support, MWCP-run shelters provide temporary assistance to victims of child trafficking, including food; education; medical and psychological care; and reintegration services. Child Protection Directorates at various ministries and the National Police's CPB work together to provide support and reintegration services to victims of exploitation. (8,10) Shelters continued to provide victim services during the reporting period. (8)
MWCP's Regional Child Protection Committees	Coordinates regional government efforts to address the worst forms of child labor. Includes representatives from MWCP, MOPS, MOJ, and the police. (1) Research was unable to determine whether the committee was active during the reporting period. (1)
Multi-sectoral Technical Committee Against Migrant Smuggling and Human Trafficking*	Implements national referral mechanism and new standard operating procedures governing the prevention, identification, and care provided to victims of human trafficking. Coordinates human trafficking-related trainings for judges and prosecutors countrywide. (1,10) Responsible for collecting data related to trafficking in persons. (10) Includes members from governmental and non-governmental bodies, including the Ministries of Justice, Foreign Affairs, Social Action, Public Health, and Communication; the Judiciary Police; the National Gendarmerie; the National Commission of Human Rights; INTERPOL; and various civil society organizations. (10) The committee was launched in July 2021 by MOJ in conjunction with IOM. (1,10)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

The operations of the Ministry of Women and Childhood Protection's (MWCP) Regional Child Protection Committees were limited by the impact of the pandemic, lack of funding, and limited personnel. In addition, the Multi-sectoral Technical Committee Against Migrant Smuggling and Human Trafficking was launched in July 2021. However as of October 2021, when donor funding from the Italian government expired, it has not received funding from the Government of Chad. (1)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including a lack of implementation.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Road Map to Implement the President's Ordinance on Trafficking in Persons	Adopted in 2019, with the ultimate goal of implementing a National Action Plan. Coordinates interagency enforcement of the 2018 President's Ordinance on Trafficking in Persons. (1) Includes provisions for training members of the courts, local authorities, traditional and religious leaders, members of civil society, and members of enforcement agencies. (1) The National Action Plan was not yet created during the reporting period. (1) However, the Multisectoral Technical Committee on Migrant Smuggling and Trafficking in Persons, after its July 2021 launch, released a Semester Section Plan covering July-December 2021. (10)
Ministry of Economy and Development Planning (MEDP) Policies	Includes the 5-Year Plan for Development (2017–2021), which aimed to conduct a survey on child labor every 3 years, increase the rate of birth registrations, increase educational opportunities, and strengthen the human and financial capacity of MOPS's directorate charged with addressing the worst forms of child labor. (1,38) Vision 2030, another MEDP policy, aims to increase educational opportunities, establish social protection policies, and implement a national employment policy with a youth focus. (1) Research was unable to determine whether components relating to child labor in either policy were active during the reporting period. (1)
Interim Education Plan (2018–2021)	Included measures to adopt bilingual basic education (French and Arabic) and integrate Chad's refugee camp schools into the national school system. Education Cannot Wait, a UNICEF-funded program, was partially developed under the auspices of the Interim Education Plan. (9,39,40) Research was unable to determine whether funds were dispersed to implement this initiative during the reporting period. (1)

Policy	Description
National Biometric Population Registry	Adopted in 2020 under Ordinance No. 002-PR-2020, which created a national biometric population registry and permitted the organization of civil registry in the Republic of Chad, including for births, marriages, and divorces. Includes a dedicated database to facilitate identification of victims and perpetrators of child labor. (1,41) Activities under this policy were not implemented during the reporting period. (1,42)
Comprehensive Refugee Response Framework	The passage of Law No 027/PR/2020: Asylum in the Republic of Chad, formally guarantees refugees and asylum-seekers the right to free movement, access to public health services, and education. (43,44) Integrates schools in refugee camps into Chad's national education system, per the UNHCR's Global Compact on Refugees Framework. (43) Government implementing partners include the Ministry of Administration and Territory, Ministry of Economy and Development Pacification, Ministry of Education, Ministry of Health, and Ministry for Child Protection. Other partners include Chad's National Commission for the Reception and Reintegration of Refugees and Returnees, Cellule Filets Sociaux, and local authorities at the provincial and prefecture levels. (43) The framework is supported by international donor agencies and NGOs such as the Jesuit Refugee Service Chad, whose Darfuri camp mentorship program (2019–2022) pairs Sudanese refugee teachers with local Chadian teachers. (43,45) Research was unable to determine whether this policy was active during the reporting period. (1)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (46,47)

Although the government adopted a roadmap to address trafficking in persons, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor. (1) While the Semester Action Plan on Trafficking in Persons for July to December 2021 contained strategic objectives and costs tied to specific activities, there were no dedicated funds to cover these costs after 2021, when Italian government funding for the Multisectoral Technical Committee ended. (10) Research was unable to determine whether any activities for the Semester Action Plan were carried out after September 2021. (10)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Refugees and Host Communities Support (2018–2023)	$60 million World Bank-funded project to improve access to health and education services for refugees and host communities by rehabilitating and constructing primary schools. (1,48,49) As of the end of the reporting period, cash transfers reached approximately 100,000 participants, 80 percent of whom were women. (48)
UNICEF Programs	Multifaceted humanitarian action targeting children, including refugees and internally displaced children in Chad. Includes interventions in education, healthcare, nutrition, and other areas of basic need. (15) Through its $21 million Education Cannot Wait (2020–2022) program, supports education for 230,000 at-risk children. (50) The program was developed under the Ministry of National Education's Transitional Education Plan, Program to Strengthen Literacy, Humanitarian Response Plan, and Education Cluster Strategy. (39,50) Interventions include early childhood education, in addition to non-formal education and literacy programs for out-of-school adolescent children (ages 9 to 14). (39,50) In 2021, UNICEF continued distance learning programs through radio and television, reaching 607,675 children, including 136,426 girls. (15) UNICEF also provided school supplies to 245,940 children, including 115,251 girls, affected by the crisis in the Central African Republic and the Lake Chad Basin. (15)
UNDAF (2017–2021)	Aimed to provide access to quality education for children who are school aged, refugees, and vulnerable; improve social protection; and promote good governance. (1,53) Research was unable to determine whether the program was implemented during the reporting period. (1)
WFP Strategic Plan (2019–2023)	Aims to address hunger and malnutrition in Chad among crisis-affected and vulnerable populations. (54,55) Seeks to promote resilient livelihoods and sustainable food systems. Prioritizes strengthening national institutions to manage food security and coordinating cooperation with humanitarian and development partners in Chad. (54) Through joint initiatives Breaking Barriers to Girls' Education and Education Cannot Wait, provides meals to school children. (55) During the reporting period, WFP assisted 1.1 million crisis-affected people with unconditional food assistance, supported 218,600 children and school staff through the WFP school feeding program, and reached 173,500 people through resilience building activities such as environmental conservation and home and community asset creation. (55)

† Program is funded by the Government of Chad.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The government's funding of social programs continued to be limited due to austerity measures during the reporting period, and social services are limited to urban areas. (1) Although Chad has programs that target child labor, their scope is insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem, particularly in regards to the use of child labor in herding cattle, forced child labor in domestic work, and commercial sexual exploitation. (1,56)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Chad (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws specifically prohibit children from being used, offered, or procured for illicit activities.	2011 – 2021
	Raise the minimum age for work to the age up to which education is compulsory.	2018 – 2021
Enforcement	Ensure that the roles of enforcement agencies are well-known and understood by the public.	2016 – 2021
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by providing inspectors with sufficient resources—including training, transportation, and budget allocations—to conduct inspections in both the formal and informal sectors.	2014 – 2021
	Collect, store, and publish data on law enforcement efforts in a central database, including information about labor inspectorate funding, the number and type of inspections conducted, whether violations were found, penalties imposed, and fees collected, and the number of criminal investigations conducted, violations found, prosecutions initiated, convictions obtained, and penalties imposed.	2014 – 2021
	Establish a mechanism for the Ministry of Public Service, Employment, and Social Dialogue to receive child labor complaints.	2021
	Significantly increase the number of labor inspectors to meet the ILO's technical advice.	2012 – 2021
	Ensure that criminal law enforcement agencies are sufficiently funded, law enforcement officers are trained, and existing penalties are enforced according to the law.	2015 – 2021
	Ensure that the judicial system receives sufficient resources, including training and funding for infrastructure, to effectively prosecute cases and manage data on the worst forms of child labor.	2021
	Ensure a sufficient number of service providers are available for child survivors of trafficking so victims are not housed with their traffickers.	2020 – 2021
Coordination	Ensure that coordinating committees are active and receive adequate resources to carry out their mandates.	2014 – 2021
Government Policies	Adopt a policy to address all relevant worst forms of child labor in Chad and ensure that existing policies are fully funded and implemented.	2009 – 2021
	Ensure that activities are undertaken to implement key policies related to child labor during the reporting period and that data on these activities are published.	2020 – 2021
Social Programs	Ensure access to education for all children by eliminating school-related fees; increasing the number of schools, grade levels, classrooms, and teachers available throughout the country, including for children in refugee camps; implementing programs to increase enrollment of girls; and providing accommodations for students with disabilities.	2014 – 2021
	Ensure that all children are issued birth certificates, which may be required for school enrollment.	2014 – 2021
	Ensure that existing programs receive adequate funding to support victims of child labor throughout the country, and that programs are implemented as intended.	2016 – 2021
	Establish or expand programs to provide services to children engaged in the worst forms of child labor, such as forced child labor in herding cattle, domestic work, and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2021

In 2021, Chile made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Following Chile's ratification of the International Labor Organization's Protocol on Forced Labor, the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare created the Ministerial Advisory Commission to strengthen Chile's efforts to address forced labor among adults and children. Civil servants, police officers, and detectives were also trained on human trafficking victim assistance, including videotaped investigative interviewing. In addition, the National Tourism Service established an interagency alliance with the Undersecretary of Labor's Department of Child Labor Eradication and Inter-Agency Task Force on Trafficking in Persons to organize workshops with business owners on awareness and prevention of child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, and trafficking in persons in the tourism sector. However, children in Chile are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children are also subjected to involvement in the production and trafficking of drugs. Furthermore, prohibitions related to the use of children for illicit activities do not meet international standards.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Chile are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children are also subjected to involvement in the production and trafficking of drugs. (1,2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Chile.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	3.8 (94,025)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	99.5

	Commercial sexual exploitation, including in the production of pornography, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (5,13-15)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

The results of the 2012 National Survey of Activities of Children and Adolescents (Encuesta de Actividades de Niños, Niñas y Adolescentes) indicate that 70.6 percent of working children ages 5 to 17 are engaged in work classified as dangerous. (1) In Chile, children, some of whom may be human trafficking victims, are used to steal or produce, sell, and transport drugs. (9,13)

Indigenous children and adolescents from Otavalo, Ecuador, are especially vulnerable to human trafficking for labor exploitation in Chile. (10) In Coquimbo, children sell products in street markets and work as jugglers. (6) Children are also involved in street work, including selling handicrafts, clothes, or other goods. (9) While education is compulsory through secondary school, some educational barriers do exist in Chile, including the lack of transportation to schools in rural areas and discrimination in educational settings, specifically for migrant children. (5,8,16,17)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Chile has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Chile's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the prohibition of using children in illicit activities.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 13 of the Labor Code (18)

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	18‡	Articles 4, 25, and 27 of the General Education Law No. 20.370 (17)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 4 of the General Education Law No. 20.370 (17)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (17)

Following Chile's January 2021 ratification of ILO Protocol on Forced Labor, in October, the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare created through formal decree the Ministerial Advisory Commission for the Implementation of the Protocol. This public-private coordinating body is intended to strengthen Chile's efforts to address forced labor among both adults and children. (12,29) The Commission's first meeting was held in July 2021. (12) Also following the October 2020 preliminary publication of Law 21.271, the Ministry of Labor and Social Security published an official decree in May 2021 that formally amends Article 15 of the Labor Code, which determines dangerous work activities for children and adolescents. (12,21)

Prohibitions related to the use of children for illicit activities do not meet international standards because they only criminalize supplying children with drugs or inducing children to use drugs. (30,31) In addition, Chile's minimum age for work is lower than the age for compulsory education, which may encourage children to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. (18,17)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MINTRAB)	Designs and implements national strategies on child labor and generates awareness on child labor and commercial sexual exploitation of children. (8) Enforces child labor laws, coordinating with the Better Childhood Service and the Department of Child Labor Eradication. (2) As of 2021, the Undersecretary of Labor within MINTRAB chairs the Ministerial Advisory Commission for the Implementation of the Protocol (ILO C029) on forced labor. The Commission is made up of actors whose knowledge and experience are used to advise the Undersecretary of Labor on the limitations that may hinder implementation of the protocol. (12,29)
Better Childhood Service (Mejor Niñez)	Operates under the Ministry of Social Development and Family, guaranteeing the protection of vulnerable children and adolescents, particularly those living on the streets, and victims of commercial sexual exploitation, in coordination with the Department of Child Labor Eradication. (32,33) Officially replaced the National Minor's Service (SENAME) in October 2021 as the new National Service for the Specialized Protection of Children and Adolescents ("Better Childhood Service"). (15) Also coordinates with Local Offices of Childhood ( Oficinas Locales de la Niñez ), referring cases of children whose rights have been violated to appropriate social services and monitor cases of the worst forms of child labor. These offices are located in municipalities throughout the country and are part of the larger social protection network overseen by Better Childhood Service. (32,34)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Organization/Agency	Role
National Investigations Police (PDI)	Investigate and prevent the worst forms of child labor by conducting community outreach activities, including trainings and information sessions. (35) Operate under the Ministry of the Interior. (10) Within PDI, the Brigade to Investigate Trafficking in Persons investigates the trafficking of children, modern slavery, and organized crime. (35,36) The Sexual Assault Victim Care Center provides support to child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. (35)
National Uniformed Police ( Carabineros )	Investigate, prevent, and detect crimes, including child labor violations, by conducting community policing and specialized investigations. Under the Directorate for Family Protection, provide specialized orientation on policies and operating plans for detection and prevention of domestic violence and child abuse, including the commercial sexual exploitation of children. (37) Operate under the Ministry of the Interior. (10) Receive referrals on the worst forms of child labor from the National Labor Directorate, which houses the Undersecretary of Labor. (5)
National Prosecutor's Office ( Fiscalía Nacional )	Conducts criminal investigations and prosecutes crimes related to the worst forms of child labor. Trains and coordinates with interagency partners, including PDI, Carabineros , and regional and local prosecutor's offices. (5,33,38,39)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Chile took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including insufficient human resource allocation.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

† January 1, 2021 - January 31, 2022

In 2021, labor inspectors received training on child labor and adolescent work, including modifications made to the Labor Code. Facilitators of this training included the ILO and the Department of Child Labor Eradication of the Undersecretary of Labor. (33)

However, the number of vehicles available to labor inspectors is insufficient, especially in areas where there is a great distance between regional offices and employers. (7) Although the number of labor inspectors is unknown, it is likely insufficient for the size of Chile's workforce, which includes approximately 8.6 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Chile would need about 579 inspectors. (40,41)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Chile took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including insufficient penalties for promoting or facilitating the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021

*The National Prosecutor's database does not differentiate between investigations and prosecutions. (42)

In November 2021, 200 civil servants from the departments of health, education, labor, women's assistance, child protective services, and the police attended a webinar training entitled "Chile-Ecuador on Prevention, Investigation, and Best Victims' Assistance Practices on Trafficking in Persons" organized by the Interagency Task Force on Trafficking in Persons (MITP). (15) The MITP also organized a refresher training on human trafficking and migrant smuggling for 40 police officers of the organized crime division of the National Uniformed Police (Carabineros) in December. In that same month, 26 detectives of the National Investigations Police completed a month-long specialized training program on videotaped investigative interviewing. (15)

Despite these efforts, judges frequently suspend or commute sentences of individuals convicted of commercial sexual exploitation of children. (5, 13) In addition, the penalties for promoting or facilitating the commercial sexual exploitation of children, ranging from 3 to 20 years' imprisonment, are not commensurate with those for other serious crimes, such as rape. (42) Moreover, there is a lack of adequate shelters for child victims of trafficking in persons. (15) In addition, the government did not provide information on criminal law enforcement efforts, including the number of investigations, violations, prosecutions, convictions, and penalties imposed for violations related to the worst forms of child labor.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Department of Child Labor Eradication	Ensures Chile's compliance with international treaties that protect children and adolescents in the labor market, in both formal and informal settings, in coordination with the Better Childhood Service. Housed within the Undersecretary of Labor. (43,44) Also coordinates both the Social Observatory to Eradicate Child Labor, which conducts technical studies on child and adolescent labor issues and evaluates current policies to eliminate child labor; and the National Advisory Committee to Eradicate Child Labor. (5,45) The Department led a variety of activities in 2021, including a tripartite meeting in January to present finalized regulations on the hazardous list of activities for adolescent workers with guidelines for employers to use. (12)
National Advisory Committee to Eradicate Child Labor	Led by MINTRAB and includes representatives from the ministries of Agriculture, Education, and Justice; the National Statistics Institute; the National Tourism Service; PDI; and the Carabineros . (46) The Regional Advisory Committees for the Eradication of Child Labor are led by the Regional Secretary of Labor and replicate at the regional level the functioning of the National Advisory Committee to Eradicate Child Labor. (10) The National Advisory Committee met in May 2021, and the executive secretariat met in both March and April of 2021. Regional Committees held 27 sessions during the year in various regions of the country. (12)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Undersecretary for Children	Manages, coordinates, and supervises the development and implementation of public policies and programs aimed at protecting children and adolescents, among them the Subsystem of Integral Protection of Children, "Chile Crece Contigo" program. Located under the Ministry of Social Development and Family. (2,8,47,48) Responsible for implementing the National Childhood Policy and its respective Action Plan through coordination mechanisms for intersectoral work. (2,8,47,48) Supports dissemination, training, and awareness-raising actions aimed at promoting rights, and developing studies and research, preparing annual reports on the general state of childhood and adolescence, and collaborating with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in the preparation of documents the government must present to the specialized bodies and committees at the UN. Also seeks to generate social, economic, and cultural conditions that allow families to adequately care for and protect children and adolescents, guaranteeing their protection and the exercise of their rights. (8) In 2021, the Undersecretariat convened the Intersectoral Technical Committee, which includes 35 ministries and agencies across the Government of Chile. (12) The committee's meeting featured a discussion on the link between child labor, migration, and the effects of the COVID-19 pandemic. (49)
Interagency Task Force on Trafficking in Persons (MITP)	Coordinates the government's anti-human trafficking efforts. Includes three sub-committees: awareness and prevention, control and prosecution, and protection and support for victims. (36) Led by the Ministry of the Interior with support from law enforcement agencies, Ministry of Foreign Relations, Ministry of Justice, National Prosecutor's Office, Better Childhood Service, and others. (5,50) Created regional task forces throughout the country. (5,36) The task force met nine times in 2021, including special case analysis meetings for the Victims Sub-Commission to coordinate across all institutions and NGOs that participate on the task force. (15) In January 2021, the Valparaíso Regional MITP, the Undersecretariat of Labor, and the National Tourism Service (SERNATUR) organized a webinar on "Child Labor, Trafficking in Persons and Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (CSEC)" for 100 government workers from the health, labor, education, women's rights, children's service sectors, and the police. (15)
The Tacna-Arica Bi-regional Roundtable	Focuses on fulfilling the commitments made at the Presidential Meeting and the Third Meeting of Ministers between Peru and Chile, held in October 2019. (8) Jointly coordinated between the Regional Ministerial Secretariat of Arica and Parinacota of Chile and the Regional Directorate of Labor and Employment Promotion of the Tacna Region of Peru. (8) MINTRAB, through the Department of Child Labor Eradication, functions as technical support to the roundtable. Set up to coordinate efforts and exchange experiences to prevent and eradicate child labor in the border area. (8) Although this coordinating body still exists, it did not take any actions during the reporting period due to difficulties coordinating between the two regions given pandemic-related border restrictions. (12)

During the reporting period, the National Tourism Service (SERNATUR) established an interagency alliance with the Labor Undersecretary's Department of Child Labor Eradication and the MITP to organize workshops with business owners on awareness and prevention of child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, and trafficking in persons in the tourism sector. (15)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including insufficient implementation.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Workers (2015–2025)	Establishes a strategy to eradicate child labor by combining efforts across national and regional agencies and private and public entities, and requiring regions to establish a strategy to address child labor issues in the area. (46) MINTRAB oversees the implementation of regional strategies, including the design and implementation of regional operating plans. (37) During the reporting period, the government carried out a total of 247 activities under this policy, both at the central level and regional level, including conferences, virtual seminars, trainings, and collaboration agreements with universities to promote regional research on child labor. (12) In support of Chile's designation as a member of ILO's "Alliance 8.7" to eradicate child labor, MINTRAB, MITP, and ILO organized a webinar, "The Role of Companies in Eradicating Child Labor and TIP," which was attended by 120 public officials and private sector representatives. (15)
National Plan of Action for Children and Adolescents (2018–2025)	Works to consolidate, monitor, and improve all public initiatives that protect the rights of children and adolescents. Created by the Undersecretary for Children. (5,51,52) Among the Plan's many objectives is the increased coordination and strengthening of the National Strategy for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Workers 2015–2025, including expanding programs that help families at risk of child labor find employment so that their children will be less likely to work. (51-53) MINTRAB participates and provides information and guidance regarding child labor. (54) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken during the reporting period to implement this plan.

Policy	Description
Third Action Plan against the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents	Creates cooperation mechanisms for private and public institutions to collaborate on preventing and detecting commercial sexual exploitation of children and providing social services and rights restitution to victims. (55,56) Under this plan, MITP held two virtual discussions on the commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents, child labor, and human trafficking in the context of travel and tourism in May 2021 with 300 participants. (15)
National Action Plan Against Human Trafficking (2019–2022)	Seeks to prevent and address human trafficking, with a focus on women and children. Encompasses four strategic areas: prevention and awareness raising, prosecution, victims' assistance and protection, and inter-institutional cooperation and coordination. (57) MITP developed the Action Plan in 2019, which was approved at the working level but is awaiting approval at the ministerial level. (36,58,59) During the reporting period and under direction from this plan, the government held trainings on child labor and human trafficking for public officials from the National Tourism Service (SERNATUR) and regional directors of the National Immigration Service. (12)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (60,61)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including inadequate funding.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
SENAME Programs for Children at Risk of or Engaged in the Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Approximately 132 programs serving disadvantaged youth and children at risk of or engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation. Include programs implemented by municipal governments and local branches of the Offices for the Protection of Children's Rights. (62) SENAME also administers 17 programs to serve child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. (62) Due to the budget reduction suffered by government institutions as a result of the pandemic, the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare did not finance any of these projects during the reporting period. (12) SENAME was replaced by Better Childhood Services during the reporting period and continued to evaluate which of these programs to continue and end during 2022. (63)
USDOL-Funded Projects	Measurement, Awareness-Raising, and Policy Engagement (MAP 16) Project on Child Labor and Forced Labor, a project that improves knowledge of these issues through research and data-driven techniques, strengthens policies and improves government capacity, and strengthens partnerships to accelerate progress. (64) Additional information is available on the USDOL website.

† Program is funded by the Government of Chile.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Chile (Table 11).

For the 2021 reporting period, no assessment has been made regarding Christmas Island's efforts to advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor because there is no evidence of a worst forms of child labor problem and the territory has a good legal and enforcement framework on child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor exists on Christmas Island. (1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Christmas Island is non-self-governing and is included as part of the territory of the Australian Commonwealth. (2-4) Under the Acts Interpretation Act 1901 (Cth), all laws of the Commonwealth are applicable to Christmas Island as if it were a part of mainland Australia. (3,5) The following Conventions have been extended to Christmas Island (Table 1).

Table 1. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Christmas Island is subject to the laws and regulations related to child labor of the Commonwealth of Australia and the state of Western Australia. The government's laws and regulations are in line with relevant international standards (Table 2).

Table 2. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	17.5	Section 190 of the Children and Community Services Act 2004 (WA) (CI); Section 29 of the School Education Act 1999 (WA) (CI) (6,7)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Regulations 6.2 and 6.6 and Schedule 6.3 of the Occupational Health and Safety Regulations 1996 (WA) (CI); Section 10.4 of the Mines Safety and Inspection Regulations 1995 (WA) (CI); Section 193 of the Children and Community Services Act 2004 (WA) (CI) (6,8,9)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Regulations 6.2 and 6.6 and Schedule 6.3 of the Occupational Health and Safety Regulations (WA) (CI) 1996; Classes of Licenses for High Risk Work; Section 10.4 of the Mines Safety and Inspection Regulations 1995 (WA) (CI) (8-10)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Sections 270.1-4, 270.6, and 270.7 of the Criminal Code Act 1995 (Cth); Sections 270.6, 270.7, and 271.9 of the Crimes Legislation Amendment Act 2013 (Cth) (11,12)

Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Sections 16–18 of the Prostitution Act 2000 (WA) (CI); Section 192 of the Children and Community Services Act 2004 (WA) (CI); Section 217 of the Criminal Code Act Compilation Act 1913 (WA) (CI) (6,13,14)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Divisions 309–310 of the Criminal Code Act 1995 (Cth) (11)

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	N/A*		Canberra Act 2600 (15)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Sections 268.68 and 268.88 of the Criminal Code Act 1995 (Cth) (11)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	17.5	Section 6 of the School Education Act 1999 (WA) (CI) (7)
Free Public Education	Yes		Section 98 of the School Education Act 1999 (WA) (CI) (7)

* Country has no conscription (15)

On Christmas Island, the Children and Community Services Act 2004 (WA) (CI) sets the minimum age for light work in delivery types of employment at age 10 if the child is accompanied by a parent or an authorized adult. This is not in compliance with international standards, which set the minimum age for light work at age 13. (6,16) The lightwork framework is also insufficient because there is no limit on the number of hours children may work per week or the type of work children may engage in. (6,16) However, the government has noted that there are no delivery services, no post or letter boxes, and no newspaper on Christmas Island; as a result, there are no types of light work present on Christmas Island in which children under age 13 could engage. (17)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms. However, the Government of Australia has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Western Australia Department of Communities	Enforces laws related to the minimum age for work through a Service Delivery Arrangement under which Australian Government services are provided on Christmas Island. (17)
Western Australia Department of Mines, Industry Regulation and Safety	Enforces laws related to hazardous child labor and occupational safety and health through a Service Delivery Arrangement under which Australian Government services are provided on Christmas Island. (17)
Australian Federal Police	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor. (18) Oversee the Child Protection Operations Team, which coordinates and investigates online and multi-jurisdictional child sexual exploitation issues, including child pornography; and the Human Trafficking Teams, which investigate human trafficking for the purposes of transnational sexual and labor exploitation. (19,20)

Labor Law Enforcement

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for labor law enforcement actions to address child labor.

Criminal Law Enforcement

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for criminal law enforcement actions to address child labor.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor. However, the Government of Australia has established a mechanism to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 4).

Table 4. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Departmental Committee on Human Trafficking	Deals with child labor issues, including its worst forms, from a counter-trafficking perspective. Comprises 12 government agencies, including the Australian Federal Police, Department of Employment, and Department of Foreign Affairs, and is chaired by the Australian Border Force. (17,19) Includes an Operational Working Group subcommittee that meets monthly and refers emerging policy issues for consideration by the Inter-Departmental Committee on Human Trafficking. (17)

During the reporting period, the Government of Australia issued its annual report detailing the previous year's activities related to implementation of the Modern Slavery Act. Efforts included conducting awareness-raising events and promoting best practices in public sector procurement. (21)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor. However, the Government of Australia has established policies related to child labor (Table 5).

Table 5. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking and Slavery 2020–2025	Sets five strategic priorities for addressing modern slavery, which the National Action Plan defines as trafficking in persons, slavery, slavery-like practices, and the worst forms of child labor. Priorities include: (1) prevention; (2) disruption, investigation, and prosecution; (3) support and protection for victims; (4) partnerships; and (5) research. (17,22) The policy was active during the reporting period. (17)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor.

However, federal cash transfer programs for youth and families are available to residents of Christmas Island. (17)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, there are no actions needed to advance the continued prevention of child labor on Christmas Island.

In 2021, Colombia made significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government amended the Penal Code, increasing penalties for aggravating factors in crimes of human smuggling and trafficking involving children. The Ministry of Labor also adopted a "Guide for the Identification of Possible Cases of Trafficking in Persons for the Purpose of Forced Labor" to help labor inspectors identify forced labor crimes. The Intersectoral Commission for the Prevention of the Recruitment and Use of Children by Illegal Armed Groups published an extensive report analyzing the incidence and patterns of the recruitment, use, and sexual violence against children carried out by illegal armed and criminal groups for the 2016–2020 period. The Ministry of the Interior also developed and implemented the national trafficking in persons prevention plan "Zero Complicity," which focused on strengthening trafficking prevention efforts and includes a public awareness campaign. In addition, the government introduced the "Katunaa Modality" social program designed to protect the fundamental rights of children ages 6 to 13, including with regard to child labor, sexual violence, and intra-family violence. However, children in Colombia are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and illicit activities, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The government does not employ a sufficient number of labor inspectors. Research also indicates that existing social programs are insufficient to address the scope of the worst forms of child labor in Colombia.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Colombia are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and illicit activities, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1) The government publishes annual statistics on children's work from its National Household Survey, based on research conducted in the fourth quarter of every year. (2-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Colombia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	2.5 (210,431)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	93.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	2.5
Primary Completion Rate (%)		106.8

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of coffee, including the application of pesticides;† production of sugarcane,† cocoa, pome and stone fruits, grapes, and unrefined brown sugar (panela) (3,7-11)
	Animal husbandry,† hunting,† and fishing,† including conch and crab harvesting (3,7-13)
Industry	Mining† coal, emeralds, gold, tungsten, and coltan (11,14)
	Producing bricks and wood charcoal (3,7,11,14)
	Construction,† particularly of large-scale projects (3,11)
	Cutting and transporting wood,† and creating artisanal woodwork such as handicrafts and decorative items (8,11,12,15)
	Processing shrimp and langoustines† (8)
Services	Street work,† including vending and helping shoppers carry bags in urban markets,† begging,† guarding or washing cars and motorcycles,† and selling massages and hair braiding to tourists in beach areas (3,11,16-23)
	Recycling† (11,16)
	Domestic work,† including caring for children,† cooking, gardening, and shopping for the home (11)
	Working in retail establishments, hotels, and restaurants (2,11)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1,11,24)
	Use in the production of pornography (11,24)
	Recruitment of children by non-state armed groups for use in armed conflict (1,11,25)
	Forced begging and use in illicit activities by illegal armed groups and criminal organizations, including committing homicides, extortions, trafficking drugs, and the production of marijuana and coca (stimulant plant), each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1,3,11,25,26)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Reports indicate that the forced recruitment and use of minors in Colombia by illegal armed groups, including Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia—Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP), Segunda Marquetalia, the National Liberation Army, and the Gulf Clan continued in 2021. (11) Children are typically recruited by armed groups to commit crimes, including producing and trafficking drugs, committing extortion, and serving as combatants and informants. (1,11) Armed groups also continued to use children for commercial sexual exploitation. (11,24) Colombia's 2016 Peace Accord with the FARC integrated special provisions known as the "Ethnic Chapter" to address the disproportionate harm Afro-Colombian and indigenous communities suffered during the 50-year conflict. High levels of violence persist in these communities and ethnic community leaders report a recent increase in child recruitment by narcotraffickers. (27)

Commercial sexual exploitation of children occurs more often in private homes rented online than in commercial establishments. Children are particularly vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation in areas with foreign tourism, in mining communities, and in areas with large construction projects. (11) Some child victims of commercial sexual exploitation are reportedly recruited in schools and, in some cases, prostitution ring members conduct surveillance around schools in search of vulnerable girls. (3,8,11,28) Venezuelan children are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including street work and commercial sexual exploitation. (11)

Although basic education is free and compulsory for all children up to age 18, in practice, children in rural parts of the country face barriers to accessing education due to living long distances from school and lack of transportation, inadequate school infrastructure, and violence. (11) A need for remote learning in response to the COVID-19 pandemic continued to have a significant negative impact on school attendance in 2021. However, the Ministry of Education reported programmatic and financial measures to improve school attendance, including the strengthening of the Active Search (Búsqueda Activa) strategy to locate children who have left school and re-enroll them. (11,29) The government reported a 23 percent increase in the matriculation of Venezuelan children from October 2020 to January 2022. (11)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Colombia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Colombia's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the difference in the minimum age for work and the compulsory education age.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 35 of the Child and Adolescence Code (30)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 117 of the Child and Adolescence Code (30)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Article 3 of Resolution 1796 (31)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 17 of the Constitution; Articles 141 and 188A of the Penal Code (32,33)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 17 of the Constitution; Articles 188A–188C of the Penal Code; Law No. 2168 (32-34)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 213–219B of the Penal Code (33)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 162, 188D, and 384 of the Penal Code (33)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 81 of Law 1861 (35)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	Yes		Article 4 of Law 1861 (35)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Article 162 of the Penal Code; Article 20 the Child and Adolescence Code; Article 14 of Law 418 (30,33,36)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	18	Decree 4807 of 2011 (37)
Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 2.3.1.6.4.1 and 2.3.1.6.4.2 of Decree 1075; Article 1 of Decree 4807; Article 28 of the Child and Adolescence Code (30,37,38)

In December 2021, the Colombian government amended the Penal Code, increasing penalties for aggravating factors in crimes of human smuggling and trafficking of minors. The amendment also stipulates that parents or legal guardians who subject their children to begging or other forms of exploitation and are convicted of the crime, shall lose parental or guardian rights of the minor. (11,34) The government also modified the Child and Adolescence Code, rescinding the authority of the family commissioner to provide authorization for adolescent work. This tightens oversight of work permits, which are now authorized only by labor inspectors, or in their absence, the municipal mayor. (11,39) As the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education.

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor's (MOL) Inspection, Monitoring, Control, and Territorial Management Department	Receives complaints of labor law violations and conducts labor inspections, including inspections to verify labor conditions for adolescent workers and compliance with other child labor provisions. Oversees the Internal Working Group on Child Labor Eradication. (8,40) Also operates the Comprehensive Child Labor Information System, a child labor monitoring system that identifies children engaged in or at risk of child labor. (8) Collects fines for labor violations assessed after January 1, 2020, and administers proceeds through a fund designated to strengthen the labor inspectorate. (3,4)
Active Search Team for Trafficking in Persons, Sexual Exploitation of Children, Girls, and Adolescents and Related Crimes (Bogotá)	Uses a proactive investigation model to identify crimes related to human trafficking and the sexual exploitation of children in Bogotá instead of waiting for victims to seek attention at the national level. Created in 2018 by the Bogotá Mayor's office. (41,42)
National Police	Investigate cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking and house the Child Protection Police Unit. (8,43) Judicial police and the Technical Investigation Corps support the Attorney General's Office (AGO) throughout the investigation process. (8)
Attorney General's Office (AGO)	Investigates and prosecutes cases of child recruitment for use in armed conflict and illicit activities, commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, and human trafficking, with support from the Office's Technical Investigation Unit, which also advises the Attorney General in the design of policies and strategies related to the role of judicial police investigators. (8,12,30) Also oversees the Articulation Group for Combating Trafficking in Persons, which includes prosecutors, analysts, and judicial police engaged in addressing organized crime and human trafficking. (44)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Colombia took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor (MOL) that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including insufficient resource allocation.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2020	2021
Labor Inspectorate Funding	$875,000 (3)	$1,400,000 (11)
Number of Labor Inspectors	845 (3)	885 (11)
Mechanism to Assess Civil Penalties	Yes (45)	Yes (45)
Initial Training for New Labor Inspectors	Yes (3)	Yes (11)
Training on New Laws Related to Child Labor	N/A	N/A
Refresher Courses Provided	Yes (3)	Yes (11)
Number of Labor Inspections Conducted	Unknown (3)	13,018 (11)
Number Conducted at Worksite	Unknown (3)	Unknown (11)
Number of Child Labor Violations Found	Unknown (3)	1 (11)
Number of Child Labor Violations for Which Penalties Were Imposed	Unknown (3)	0 (11)
Number of Child Labor Penalties Imposed that Were Collected	Unknown (3)	N/A
Routine Inspections Conducted	Unknown (3)	Yes (11)
Routine Inspections Targeted	Unknown (3)	Yes (11)
Unannounced Inspections Permitted	Yes (45)	Yes (45)
Unannounced Inspections Conducted	Unknown (3)	Yes (11)
Complaint Mechanism Exists	Yes (3)	Yes (11)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	Yes (3)	Yes (11)

The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Colombia's workforce, which includes more than 23 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Colombia would need to employ about 1,549 inspectors. (47,48) The MOL continued to train new and veteran inspectors in 2021, but noted that child labor-related trainings could be strengthened. (11) The government did not report how many inspections were conducted at worksites during the reporting period. (11)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Colombia took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including insufficient funding.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Unknown (3)	Unknown (11)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A	N/A
Refresher Courses Provided	Yes (3)	Yes (11)
Number of Investigations	2,568 (3)	2,457 (11)
Number of Violations Found	2,124 (3)	2,444 (11)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	71 (3)	316 (11)
Number of Convictions	229 (49)	Unknown (11)
Imposed Penalties for Violations Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Yes (49)	Yes (50-52)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (3)	Yes (11)

The AGO reported 2,457 criminal investigations related to the worst forms of child labor for the period of January 1–November 31, 2021, of which 47.7 percent involved child pornography and 28.8 percent involved commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking-related crimes. (11) Of these cases, 316 suspects were charged with crimes related to the worst forms of child labor. (11) While the government did not report annual statistics on the number of convictions for crimes related to the worst forms of child labor, the AGO convicted and sentenced perpetrators of commercial sexual exploitation of children during the reporting period. (50,52) The AGO reported that 316 suspects were charged in these cases. (11) However, the AGO reported that its case management system tracks criminal proceedings through conviction only, and does not include information on sentencing. (3,8)

During the reporting period, the AGO trained a total of 1,943 officials on trafficking-related crimes, including 111 prosecutors and judicial police who participated in a course on improving investigative techniques for crimes related to the recruitment and use of children by illegal armed groups. (11) In July 2021, the MOL with support from the UNODC, adopted a "Guide for the Identification of Possible Cases of Trafficking in Persons for the Purpose of Forced Labor." This guide helps labor inspectors identify possible cases of forced labor through their inspections and provides a protocol for the referral of cases to the Attorney General's Office (AGO). (11,53)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8).

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Interagency Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker (CIETI)	Coordinates efforts to address the worst forms of child labor. (3) Chaired by MOL, includes 13 government agencies and representatives from trade unions, business associations, and civil society organizations. Oversees department-level CIETIs throughout the country, each comprising municipal-level committees. (54,55) In 2021, the committee implemented a survey across 28 of Colombia's 32 departments to monitor municipal-level efforts to address child labor. (11)
National Interagency Committee for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Coordinates and implements efforts to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Led by MOL and comprising various government agencies. (54,56) Met twice during the reporting period to strengthen interagency coordination and report on efforts in 2020 and 2021. The committee also convened a range of stakeholders, both government and non-government, in Cartagena in September to raise awareness of the commercial sexual exploitation of children. (11)
Colombian Institute for Family Well-Being (ICBF)	Operates Mobile Teams for Comprehensive Protection to coordinate government actions to protect children's rights, including protection from child labor. Supports demobilized child soldiers by strengthening family networks and increasing access to health services, food, education, and shelter. (8,57) Serves as Administrator of the Fund Against Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents. (58) Processes child labor complaints, operates telephone hotlines to report child labor cases, and provides social services to children engaged in or at risk of child labor. (8,12) Lead agency among those comprising the National System of Family Well-Being, which promotes interagency coordination to protect children's rights, including those related to child labor, and designs, implements, monitors, and evaluates policies related to childhood and adolescence. (4,54,59) In 2021, provided capacity-building assistance to 11 regional CIETI committees and participated in designing a "Strategy for the Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents" with the Department of Education on fundamental rights-related risks facing school-age children. (11) Also held a virtual forum on the COVID-19 pandemic's impact on child labor in the domestic sphere moderated by government officials and academics with more than 500 participants. In addition, continued to coordinate efforts to prevent child labor and protect adolescent workers in sugarcane under the "Pact for Growth and Employment Generation in Agro-Industrial Sugarcane" public-private partnership. (11)
Interinstitutional Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons	Leads and coordinates efforts among government agencies to address human trafficking. Created by Law 985 and chaired by the Ministry of the Interior (MOI). (60) Comprising 19 government entities, including Ministry of Foreign Affairs, MOL, and the Ministry of Health and Social Protection, among others. (61) In 2021, the committee held four sessions covering the modification of internal regulations, investigations and prosecutions, compliance, and the creation and approval of the Protocol for the Identification of Victims of Human Trafficking. (50)
Intersectorial Commission for the Prevention of the Recruitment and Use of Children by Illegal Armed Groups (CIPRUNNA)	Guides, coordinates, and monitors the actions carried out by state entities at both the national and territorial level to prevent the recruitment and use of, and sexual violence against, children by illegal armed groups and criminal gangs. (3,11,62) Led by the Presidency's Office for Human Rights and International Affairs, comprises 22 entities, including AGO and MOL as permanent members. (3,8,62-64) Met twice during the reporting period and published an extensive report analyzing the incidence and patterns of the recruitment, use, and sexual violence against children carried out by illegal armed groups and criminal gangs for the 2016–2020 period. (11,65) Also published a "Manual for the Establishment of Territorial Routes of Prevention," which provides step-by-step instruction to local-level agencies to build and use protocols to prevent and address the recruitment and use of children by armed groups. This publication is a key deliverable under the National Policy for the Prevention of Recruitment, Use, and Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents by Illegal Armed Groups or Organized Criminal Gangs. (11,66)

‡ The government has other coordinating mechanisms that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (67-70)

In previous years, research indicated that there was inconsistent coordination in the areas of human trafficking victim identification and assistance. However, in 2021, the Ministry of Interior created the Operating Committee for the Fight Against Human Trafficking, which initiates and coordinates victim assistance among local trafficking committees and state entities, including the Judicial Police, NGOs, and the Colombian Institute for Family Well-Being (ICBF). (50)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established relevant policies that are consistent with relevant international standards on child labor (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Policy Guidelines to Prevent and Eradicate Child Labor and Protect the Adolescent Worker (2017–2027)	Aims to address child labor in the agriculture sector, develop child labor prevention strategies, improve the quality and coverage of child protection services, protect adolescent workers from hazardous work, create strategies to address child labor in domestic work, and establish evaluation and monitoring mechanisms to assess progress. (71) The policy also contains a Roadmap for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor in Mining and a cooperative agreement between the Ministry of Mining and Energy and ICBF to prevent child labor in mining. (72,73) Under these guidelines, in 2021, ICBF published an operational manual that further specifies the model and measures for assistance provision under its Administrative Program for the Re-establishment of Rights, including with regard to children and adolescents who have been engaged in child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and armed conflict. ICBF also held 27 capacity-building workshops on child labor prevention and elimination for the National System of Family Well-Being agencies and department-level CIETIs. (11)
National Policy on Childhood and Adolescence (2018–2030)	Articulates multiple sub-policies on the worst forms of child labor, protection of adolescents, prevention and eradication of commercial sexual exploitation of children, and prevention of the recruitment and use of children by armed groups. Promotes the comprehensive welfare and development of children and adolescents, recognizing them as rights-bearing subjects and integral to national development. (12,74) ICBF continued to implement the Strategy for the Prevention of Specific Risks under this policy during the reporting period. It also conducted programs that aimed to prevent human trafficking, including 21 outreach events that reached 1,454 participants, and 37 events on the prevention of the commercial sexual exploitation of children that reached 3,616 participants. (11)
National Strategy for the Prevention and Eradication of the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (2018–2028)	Guides Colombian government actions at the national, departmental, and municipal levels for the prevention of commercial sexual exploitation, victim assistance, and the strengthening of sentencing for abusers. (75) As part of this strategy, the Colombian government maintains an "Eyes Everywhere" (" Ojos en Todas Partes ") public awareness campaign, which aims to prevent child sex tourism. Led by the Ministry of Commerce, Industry, and Tourism, and implemented in coordination with ICBF and the National Tourism Fund. (12,41) MOL continued to promote the National Strategy in 2021 at the Departmental Sub-Commissions of the Tripartite Permanent Commission for the Agreement of Wage and Labor Policies in five departments throughout Colombia. (11) ICBF and MOL also held a National Best Practices Competition to recognize department-led efforts to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children. On the International Day Against the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, the Ministry of Commerce, Industry, and Tourism held public awareness outreach on child commercial sexual exploitation with hotel associations and the tourism industry, reaching 896 participants. (11,76) In addition, the government continued implementation of the "Protecting Them Begins with Me" campaign, with leading agencies MOL and ICBF conducting virtual events during the reporting period. (11) The AGO also joined the "Strategic Alliance with the Tourism Sector to Prevent Human Trafficking" which is led by MOI and the Presidency of the Republic to discourage the purchase of commercial sex. (50)
National Strategy for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (2020–2024)	Aims to prevent human trafficking by focusing on providing immediate assistance to victims, promoting effective interagency coordination, international cooperation, and research and knowledge management. (75) Established by Decree 1818 in 2020 and led by the Interinstitutional Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons. The strategy also prioritizes migration and border-related risks and emphasizes prevention among migrant populations. (3) During the reporting period, MOI created the Operating Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons under this policy. The committee aims to centralize information on the investigation and prosecution of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation with a focus on children and adolescents in order to prioritize law enforcement efforts in cities with high prevalence of these crimes. (11,76) MOI also developed and implemented the national trafficking in persons prevention plan "Zero Complicity" in 2020 and 2021, which focused on strengthening trafficking prevention efforts and includes the public awareness campaign "#CeroComplicidadConLaTrata" (Zero Complicity with Trafficking). (11)
National Policy for the Prevention of Recruitment, Use, and Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents by Illegal Armed Groups or Organized Criminal Groups (2018–2028)	Directs actions to prevent the recruitment and use of children by armed groups. Aims to address violence against children, including the worst forms of child labor, and improve interagency coordination. (77) The government also has a Roadmap for the Restoration of Rights, Assistance, and Reparation for Children and Adolescent Victims of the Armed Conflict that establishes protocols to assist child victims of armed conflict and is implemented through interinstitutional mechanisms in various departments. (7) CIPRUNNA continued to implement the "Join for Me" ( Súmate por Mi ) and the "Future Generations" strategies under this policy in 2021. (11)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (12)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Campaigns Against Child Labor†	ICBF campaigns to increase coordination among ICBF, Child Protection Police, MOL, and municipal authorities on child labor issues, and to promote education about the risks of hazardous work. (78) In 2021, ICBF continued to implement the 49 Mobile Teams for Comprehensive Protection (EMPI) units, with a total of 147 officers working across 33 Regional Directorates to protect children's rights. The EMPI units also conducted numerous child labor prevention efforts, including "active searches" for children engaged in child labor, assisting 1,815 children at risk of child labor through October 2021. (11)
Programs Addressing Trafficking in Persons†	Eye on Trafficking aims to increase awareness of human trafficking among high school students, and School Environments in Coexistence and Peace focuses on identifying potential human trafficking victims. (54) The Ministry of Foreign Affairs' campaign, "Do Not Ignore Trafficking" ( #AnteLaTrataNoSeHaga ), is directed at border populations with limited access to digital platforms. (79) The AGO also continued to implement the "Don't be Fooled" ( #EsoEsCuento ) campaign to prevent human trafficking in 2021, with showcases on social media of the prevention campaign offices located within Colombian consulates in Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic and Barcelona, Spain. (11)
Development for Social Prosperity Programs†	Families in Action ( Familias en Acción ) uses a conditional cash transfer program to address poverty and build human capital; United Network ( Red Unidos ) coordinates actions to reduce inequality and end extreme poverty; Healthy Generations ( Generaciones con Bienestar ) operates a children's rights program offering cultural and recreational activities for children ages 6 to 17 identified as vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor; and Youth in Action ( Jóvenes en Acción ) provides technical job training and conditional cash transfers to vulnerable urban youth ages 16 to 24. (82,83) ICBF continued to implement the Healthy Generations program and under this umbrella, the sub-program Generación Sacúdate benefitted 46,594 children ages 14 to 18 across the country. (11)
USDOL-Funded Projects	During the reporting period, the Colombia Avanza project completed a youth story competition entitled "Inheriting a Coffee Culture Free of Child Labor" and four winning stories were selected out of 100. These stories were published and widely shared by the project implementers and the National Federation of Coffee Growers of Colombia in a special edition booklet raising awareness on child labor. (84) Cooperation on Fair, Free and Equitable Employment (COFFEE) developed a set of 15 open-source tools based on USDOL's Comply Chain tools which collectively form the recently launched Socially Sustainable Sourcing Toolkit. This toolkit helps businesses and other stakeholders to identify, address, and prevent labor abuses, including child labor, in coffee supply chains. (85,86) Also in 2021, Building the Capacity of Civil Society to Combat Child Labor and Improve Working Conditions in Colombia ( Pilares ) equipped 44 civil society organizations to collect community-level data and produce reports on child labor to inform government strategies, which led to 11 new alliances and 27 joint activities carried out that year. (87) The Preventing and Reducing Child Labor and Forced Labor in Palm Oil Supply Chains ( Palma Futuro ) project assessed the social compliance systems of its private sector partners and conducted trainings for their suppliers on child labor and forced labor risks. (88) The Measurement, Awareness-Raising, and Policy Engagement (MAP16) Project on Child Labor and Forced Labor global project supported the establishment of an online training system for labor inspectors. (89) In addition, during the reporting period, the Equal Access to Quality Jobs for Women and Girls in Agriculture (EQUAL) project produced a research-based factsheet identifying the working conditions of women and girls engaged in the cut flower and panela value chains, using it as a tool for engagement to foster cooperation and secure commitments with public and private sector stakeholders in preparation for field implementation in 2022. (90) Additional information is available on the USDOL website.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (7,12,91,92)

In addition to the social programs outlined above, the Colombian government introduced the "Katunaa Modality" program in 2021, designed to protect the fundamental rights of children ages 6 to 13, including their rights to a life free of child labor, sexual violence, and intra-family violence. (11) Despite these efforts, research indicates that existing social programs are insufficient to address the scope and magnitude of the worst forms of child labor problem in Colombia, particularly commercial sexual exploitation, forced begging, and recruitment for use in illicit activities. (11,93)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Colombia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Raise the minimum age for work to the age up to which education is compulsory.	2018 – 2021
Enforcement	Increase the number of labor inspectors to meet the ILO's technical advice.	2009 – 2021
	Improve the case management system to track the entire criminal proceeding process through sentencing.	2021
	Publish information on the number of inspections conducted at worksites.	2009 – 2021
	Publish information on whether criminal investigators received initial training and the number of convictions for violations related to the worst forms of child labor.	2021
Social Programs	Expand efforts to improve access to education for all children, including by ensuring adequate transportation to school, improving school infrastructures, and addressing violence at school.	2013 – 2021
	Expand social programs to sufficiently address the scope of the worst forms of child labor, particularly commercial sexual exploitation, forced begging, and recruitment for use in illicit activities.	2020 – 2021

In 2021, Comoros made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Comoros ratified the Forced Labor Protocol, which commits the country to taking effective measures to prevent forced labor, protect victims, and ensure victim access to judicial recourse. The government also modified its Penal Code to increase penalties for the use of children in drug trafficking and opened a new center in Grand Comore for vulnerable and abused children. However, children in Comoros are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in agriculture. Children also perform dangerous tasks in domestic work. Comoros' Labor Code only applies to workers with a formal work agreement, leaving child laborers, particularly those in the informal sector, vulnerable to exploitation. In addition, the legal framework defines child trafficking as requiring the use of force, fraud, or coercion, which does not conform with international standards. Finally, Comoros lacks a national action plan to address the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Comoros are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in agriculture. Children also perform dangerous tasks in domestic work. (1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Comoros.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Data detailing the prevalence of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor in Comoros are not available; however, anecdotal reports suggest that some children are subjected to domestic servitude and forced labor in the agricultural and fishing sectors. (1,4,10) Children from poor or rural families are at higher risk of being placed into forced labor. (2,3) Some parents who are unable to care for their children send them to wealthier families, who are expected to provide food, shelter, and schooling for the children in exchange for housework. In practice, some may become domestic workers and victims of labor exploitation and abuse. (1-4,11) In Comoros, it is a traditional practice to send children to Koranic teachers to receive an education. Some Koranic teachers, however, may force their students to perform domestic or agricultural work, and some children are sexually and physically abused. (1,2,8,11) In nearby Mayotte, which is administered by France, reports indicate that there are more than 3,000 unaccompanied children from Comoros, some of whom are exploited in the worst forms of child labor or may be vulnerable to human trafficking. (2,12) There are reports that drug traffickers use teenagers to transport drugs on boats to Mayotte. (3,9)

Children in Comoros often work on family farms or family fishing boats, performing agricultural tasks with sharp tools, carrying heavy loads of products, and climbing tall heights to harvest fruit. In construction, children work without basic safety or protective equipment. (3,9)

Although an approximately equal numbers of boys and girls attend public primary schools, fewer girls complete primary education. Due to a lack of facilities to accommodate female menstrual cycles, girls often miss school or leave altogether. (3,13,14) Furthermore, poor school infrastructure, the limited availability of teachers, and physical and sexual violence in schools may impede access to education and increase the vulnerability of children to the worst forms of child labor. (1,9)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Comoros has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

In June 2021, Comoros ratified the Forced Labor Protocol, which commits the country to taking effective measures to prevent forced labor, protect victims, and ensure victim access to judicial recourse. The Protocol will enter into effect on July 15, 2022. (15,16)

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Comoros' legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the lack of minimum age protections for all children.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	15	Article 129 of the Labor Code (17)

* Country has no conscription (25)

In February 2021, the government enacted changes to the Penal Code that criminalized sex and labor trafficking, including doubling penalties for the use of minors in drug trafficking. (2,3) Article 266-11 of the new criminal code prescribed penalties of 10 to 20 years' imprisonment and a fine of $74,880 (30 million Comorian francs) for human trafficking crimes involving a child victim. (2,26)

Comoros' Law to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking defines child trafficking as requiring the use of force, fraud, or coercion, which does not conform with international standards. (18,27) While the Labor Code does not stipulate this requirement, it also does not exclude the means of force, fraud, or coercion for child trafficking victims. (13,17,18) The 2020 Penal Code also does not exclude the means of force, fraud, or coercion for child trafficking victims. (28) Thus, Comoros' child trafficking laws do not meet international standards.

The Labor Code allows children under age 15 to perform light work in domestic work or agriculture if it does not interfere with their education or physical or moral development. The Labor Code, however, does not set 13 as the minimum age for light work, specify the conditions under which light work may be conducted, or limit the number of hours for light work, as defined by international standards on child labor. (13,17,22) In addition, the Labor Code applies only to workers who perform work under a formal employment agreement, which does not conform to international standards requiring that all children be protected under the law establishing a minimum age for work. (13,17)

There is no free basic education for children in Comoros as established by law, increasing the risk of children's involvement in child labor. (1,22,29) Furthermore, as the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforces child labor laws, investigates allegations of child labor, and refers cases of the worst forms of child labor for criminal investigation. (1,13)
Police Morals and Minors Brigade	Investigates allegations of child abuse, including child trafficking, and refers cases for prosecution. (8,30)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecutes criminal cases, including those related to child trafficking. Has specialized courts for minors, with judges responsible for the prosecution of cases involving forced labor, child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities. (1,8)
National Commission for Human Rights and Freedoms (CNDHL)	Investigates allegations of child labor and child trafficking, and refers cases to the Ministry of Justice for prosecution. (31)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Comoros took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor (MOL) that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including insufficient financial resource allocation.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Unannounced Inspections Conducted	No (1)	No (3)

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	Yes (1)	Yes (3)

During the reporting period, the inspectorate targeted inspections in Grand Comore and in the banking and hotel sectors. None of the inspections were child labor-specific, and no child labor violations were identified. (3)

The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Comoros' workforce, which includes approximately 236,00 workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Comoros would need to employ roughly 6 inspectors. (32) Reports indicate that there is a lack of training, equipment, transportation, and funding available to conduct child labor inspections. (1,2,33,34) Inspectors have indicated that although there is a budget for fixed costs such as salaries, there is no operating budget for the labor inspectorate, and labor inspectors have to rely on their own funds for costs such as transportation. (1-3,9)

Although the labor inspectorate is permitted to conduct unannounced inspections, in practice, inspectors usually respond only when the MOL receives complaints, and they conduct inspections primarily in the formal sector, even though most child labor is concentrated in the informal sector. The labor inspectorate is required to submit a yearly report detailing its work, including statistics on inspections, offenses identified, and penalties imposed; however, no report of this type was identified during the reporting period. (3) Finally, although a reciprocal referral mechanism was established under the National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Comoros 2010–2015, it does not appear that this mechanism is currently active. While the Services D'Ecoute may provide assistance services to children, these services are in response to cases involving violence against children. (3)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, research did not find information on whether criminal law enforcement agencies in Comoros took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Police Morals and Minors Brigade that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including insufficient financial resource allocation.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	No (1)	No (3)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A	No (3)
Refresher Courses Provided	Yes (10)	No (3)
Number of Investigations	Unknown (1)	Unknown
Number of Violations Found	Unknown (1)	Unknown
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown (1)	Unknown
Number of Convictions	Unknown (1)	Unknown
Imposed Penalties for Violations Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Unknown (1)	Unknown
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (1)	Yes (3)

Reports indicate that a lack of trained staff, equipment, transportation, and funding inhibit criminal law enforcement efforts on the worst forms of child labor. (1-4)

The government did not provide information on its criminal law enforcement efforts for inclusion in this report.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including a lack of efficacy in accomplishing mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee Against Child Labor	Coordinates government efforts on child labor. Chaired by MOL. (8,35) Research was unable to determine whether the committee was active during the reporting period.
Interagency Anti-Trafficking Task Force	Reconstituted in late December 2019 under the direction of the Foreign Ministry, comprises multiple government agencies, the Services d'Ecoute , NGOs, and international organizations. Leads government efforts in anti-trafficking policies. (1) Research was unable to determine whether the task force was active during the reporting period.
National Commission for Solidarity, Social Protection, and the Promotion of Gender	Coordinates new government efforts to strengthen partnerships with state and non-state actors engaged in child protection issues. (9) In 2021, the Commission remained active, though research was unable to identify activities that were undertaken to address child labor. (36)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including a lack of implementation.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Policy for the Protection of Children (2016–2021)	Aimed to improve child protection in Comoros; included components to combat the worst forms of child labor, with a focus on child trafficking. Led by the Ministry of Health, Solidarity, Social Protection, and Gender Promotion. (8,35,37) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the National Policy for the Protection of Children during the reporting period.

‡ The government has other policies that may have addressed child labor issues. (39)

Although child labor is integrated into some government policies, Comoros has not adopted a new national action plan to address child labor and its action plan to combat trafficking in persons was only operative for 1 year. (1,4,9)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of efforts to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Services d'Ecoute (Listening Services)†	UNICEF-funded, government-backed centers that provide protective services and offer immediate assistance to vulnerable and abused children. (3,4,33,40,41) Investigates allegations of violence against children, including the worst forms of child labor, and refers perpetrators to criminal authorities for prosecution. (9,33,42) In 2021, the government recruited psychologists to staff the centers in Ngazidja, Anjouan, and Moheli, and opened a new center in Grand Comore. (4,43)
UNICEF Country Program (2015–2021)	UNICEF-funded program that supported the government's efforts to strengthen children's rights to survival, development, education, protection, and social inclusion. (42) During the reporting period, the program implemented efforts to improve education access, including projects to install toilets in schools and expand pre-school education enrollment. (44)

† Program is funded by the Government of Comoros.

An independent evaluation of Services d'Ecoute found that it responded to the needs of child victims of violence and improved the professionalism of those responding to child victims. However, program personnel lack relevant training in social services provision and in international standards on child protection, which has resulted in incomplete casework and a lack of evaluation and follow-up with child victims. (41,45)

Although the government has programs that target child labor, their scope is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly in agriculture and domestic work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Comoros (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2021, the Democratic Republic of the Congo made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the reporting period, the government allocated 40 percent of the national budget to primary education. The National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor was extended to 2025. In addition, First Lady Denise Nyakeru Tshisekedi, in collaboration with the National Committee to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor and World Vision, hosted an advocacy workshop on combating child labor. However, children in the Democratic Republic of the Congo are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in the forced mining of gold, tin ore (cassiterite), tantalum ore (coltan), and tungsten ore (wolframite), and are used in armed conflict, sometimes as a result of forcible recruitment or abduction by non-state armed groups. Children also mine cobalt ore (heterogenite) in the Copperbelt region. The government did not publish labor or criminal law enforcement data. It also failed to take active measures to ensure that children are not inappropriately incarcerated, penalized, or physically harmed solely for unlawful acts as a direct result of being a survivor of the worst forms of child labor. Other gaps remain, including a lack of enforcement personnel, insufficient training for enforcement personnel, limited financial resources, and poor coordination of government efforts to address child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in the forced mining of gold, tin ore (cassiterite), tantalum ore (coltan), and tungsten ore (wolframite), and are used in armed conflict, sometimes as a result of forcible recruitment or abduction by non-state armed groups. (1) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the DRC. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	17.4 (Unavailable)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	68.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	16.3

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Fishing, including maintaining fishing tools, baiting hooks, transporting heavy loads, using explosives, and salting, smoking, and packaging fish (4,6-9)
	Herding and raising livestock such as chickens, goats, and pigs, including feeding, cleaning cages or stalls, and disposing of waste (7,10)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in the DRC's eastern provinces were particularly vulnerable to recruitment by non-state armed groups, forced labor in artisanal mining, and prostitution. (1,9,18,19) UNICEF and other international organizations estimate that between 40 and 70 percent of non-state armed groups in central DRC include children, some as young as age 5. (1,9,20) Non-state armed groups, criminal gangs, and illicit smuggling networks operating in the DRC continued to abduct, recruit, or use children in armed conflict during the reporting period. (1,9,21) Non-state armed groups in Ituri also reportedly seized young children from their homes, forcing them to transport heavy loads or perform domestic work. (7) There were also reports of non-state armed groups connected to ISIS-DRC, also known as the Allied Democratic Forces (ADF), recruiting children in North Kivu, South Kivu, and Ituri provinces in eastern DRC. (9,21) In the absence of a coherent national disarmament, demobilization, and reintegration (DDR) strategy, some factions continued to recruit children. (8,22)

In eastern Congo's conflict-affected regions, children extract and transport tin (cassiterite), tantalum (coltan), tungsten (wolframite), diamonds, and gold. Thousands of children also work in cobalt and copper mines in the southern Copperbelt region. (23-24) Prevalence of child labor is highest in the country's artisanal and small-scale mining (ASM) sector, which operates with minimal oversight. Child labor has been detected at one in four ASM sites, with informal or illegal ASM operations leaving children uniquely exposed to hazardous working conditions and, in some instances, to forced labor. (18,25,26) While the exact number of children working in cobalt is unknown, estimates indicate between 5,000 and 35,000 children work as artisanal cobalt miners. (27,28) In addition, non-state armed groups subjected children to forced labor in artisanal mines in Ituri, North Kivu, South Kivu, and Maniema, where forced labor, armed conflict, and mining are often intertwined. (8,29)

Children in the Kasai region were taken to Kinshasa and used in forced begging schemes. (8,29,30) Tens of thousands of civilians have been displaced in eastern Congo's Ituri Province because of the conflict, making thousands of children vulnerable to sex trafficking, forced labor, or commercial sexual exploitation. (31,29,32) Despite strong evidence that children are subjected to participation in armed conflict, commercial sexual exploitation, and forced labor in mining, the prevalence and nature of child labor in other sectors remain unclear because a comprehensive, stand-alone child labor survey has never been conducted in the DRC. (8)

UNICEF estimates that only 25 percent of children under age 5 have birth certificates. (33) Low rates of birth registration leave many children vulnerable to child labor because it makes age verification difficult during armed forces (FARDC) recruitment campaigns and hinders efforts to identify and separate children associated with armed groups. (11,34) While Congolese law provides for free, compulsory education, only slightly more than half of the DRC's 51,574 public schools were financed by the state. At public schools that did not receive government funding, parents were asked to pay school fees, which were often prohibitively high, to support teacher salaries. (35,36) In 2021, the government focused on enforcing the implementation of President Tshisekedi's 2019 initiative to provide free primary education in public schools and committed to allocating 40 percent of the national budget to primary education. During the initiative's first year, the Covid-19 pandemic impacted government budgets and forced schools to close intermittently, affecting both program implementation and impact. (7,9,37-38) Nevertheless, significant obstacles remain. (39) Non-state armed groups attacked 7 schools and 5 hospitals between January and July 2021. (31,32,40) Schools remained overcrowded, understaffed, and geographically dispersed, requiring students to travel long distances. Many have been structurally damaged by conflicts or used as shelters for IDPs. (9,16,17,34,41,42)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

The DRC has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in the DRC's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including a compulsory education age that is lower than the minimum age of work.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

The trafficking in persons law does not meet international standards because it does not explicitly list all acts of trafficking and does not prohibit forced labor. The law also requires a threat, use of force, coercion, fraud, deception, or abuse of power for a child to have been considered trafficked. (44-50) However in June 2022, the Agency for Prevention and the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons' (APLTP) issued a draft national anti-trafficking law. The legislation is expected to move to the next step, a committee review, during the legislative session, which begins in September 2022. (7,37,56)

Children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. (43,49,53) Moreover, some implementing decrees for the Child Protection Code have not been adopted. Without these decrees, multiple provisions, including the provision on light work, cannot be enforced. (43,57)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the authority of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment, Labor, and Social Welfare (MELSS)	Investigates cases related to child labor, including its worst forms. (58,59) Refers cases of child labor to the Ministry of Justice (MOJ) for prosecution. (6) In June 2021, MELSS organized a day against child labor to demonstrate the government's commitment to its elimination by 2030. (9)
Ministry of Mines	Includes the Service for Assistance and Supervision of Artisanal and Small-Scale Mining, the government agency responsible for artisanal and small-scale mining (ASM) regulation and training, and the Division of Mines, which oversees mining-related departments and public services, including large-scale mining, at the provincial level. (60-62)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Enforces criminal laws related to child labor. (6,7) Oversees five juvenile courts in Kinshasa and 19 UNICEF-funded child protection courts throughout the country. (7) Assists the International Criminal Court in conducting investigations and prosecuting individuals charged with using children in armed conflict. (6,7,63)
Ministry of the Interior (MOI)	Investigates allegations of human trafficking rings, refers child labor cases to the MOJ for prosecution, and coordinates support and reintegration services with the Ministry of Social Affairs, Solidarity, and Humanitarian Action. (6,63) Includes the Special Police Unit for Women and Children, which addresses conflict-related sexual and gender-based violence against women and children, protects women and children who are survivors of physical abuse, and ensures the demobilization of children. (6,7) The Congolese National Police (PNC) Child Protection and Sexual Violence Directorate has a formal mechanism in place with local NGOs to screen for possible human trafficking survivors among vulnerable groups. (30) The Mining and Hydrocarbon Police are also charged with enforcing the mining code, including prohibitions against child labor, at artisanal and large scale mining sites. (62)

Organization/Agency	Role
Office of the President's Personal Representative on Sexual Violence and Child Recruitment	Supports and coordinates the efforts of government officials and international bodies to address sexual violence and the use of children in armed conflict. (58,59) Compiles data on prosecutions in military and civil courts involving sexual violence against girls and maintains a hotline for reporting cases. (63)
Ministry of Defense (MOD)	Investigates and prosecutes in military courts military officials suspected of recruiting and using child soldiers, and leads the implementation of the Action Plan to End the Recruitment and Use of Child Soldiers. Through its Department of Child Protection, coordinates actions with UNICEF. (6) Through its Children Associated with Armed Forces and Armed Groups Unit, coordinates demobilization, disarmament, and reintegration activities. (63,64)
Ministry of Gender and Family (MOGF)	Oversees and investigates cases related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children. (6)

The Ministry of Social Affairs, Solidarity, and Humanitarian Affairs monitors humanitarian programs and coordinates with key actors to promote social services to vulnerable groups, including street children, human trafficking survivors, and child soldiers. (55)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in the DRC took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Employment, Labor, and Social Welfare (MELSS) that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including insufficient financial resource allocation.

The number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of the DRC's workforce, which includes over 31 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching one inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, the DRC would need to employ roughly 784 labor inspectors. (65,66) According to the Ministry of Employment, Labor, and Social Welfare (MELSS), the government provided insufficient funding to the labor inspectorate in 2021. Reports suggests that the labor inspectorate suffers from poorly equipped offices, irregular electrical power, lack government-issued computers and mobile phones, and do not have access to vehicles for inspections. (9) Regional labor inspectorates also rely on fees collected from violators to sustain their operations. (8) In addition, labor inspectors did not receive child labor law enforcement training in 2021. (9) In 2021, MELSS primarily relied on provincial labor inspectorates, the mining police, industrial mining companies, and NGOs to conduct labor inspections. (8,9)

Congo, Democratic Republic of the

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Despite these challenges, provincial authorities conducted inspections in the formal mining sector in Haut Katanga, Tanganyika, and Lualaba, where child labor is known to occur. (8) According to the Labor Inspector General, only three inspections took place of mine sites in the copper-cobalt producing region (Lubumbashi, Kalemie, and Kolwezi), given restrictions related to the pandemic. (9)

DRC's labor force is primarily engaged in the informal sector, including subsistence agriculture, which is also the DRC's largest rural sector. (67) To support labor inspections in agricultural sector, the government task force on the African Growth and Opportunity Act, in conjunction with MELSS, published a roadmap to address child labor in agriculture. The government also made a commitment to survey child labor prevalence in the rice sector in Kongo-Central Province in 2021; it is unknown whether this research has begun. (8,68)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in the DRC took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including human resource allocation.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021

While the government investigated some isolated cases involving survivors of child trafficking, these cases were limited due to the challenges presented by the pandemic. (9)

Though the FARDC separated children from armed groups, these children were occasionally detained for 2 to 14 days. (8,30) When children are detained, official procedure requires the government alert MONUSCO, which then assumes responsibility for demobilizing children and referring them to social service providers. Prior to that handover, children may be held in local detention cells, which suffer from overcrowding, lack of food and health services, and poor sanitation. (8,30)

The FARDC, mining police, and private security forces, including those guarding large-scale mining concessions, reportedly subject child laborers on ASM sites to extortion and physical abuse. (69) There is no evidence the government took action to address these abuses. (70)

Penalties for criminal violations related to the worst forms of child labor—including the use of children in armed conflict—are one to three years of imprisonment with fines of up to $784 (1,576,624 Congolese Francs), and are insufficient to serve as deterrents. (7,15,43,45,50,71,72)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including lack of coordination among agencies.

Congo, Democratic Republic of the

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (NCCL)	Oversees the National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor and monitors its implementation. (73,74) Led by the Ministry of Employment, Labor, and Social Welfare and includes representatives from 12 other ministries, local NGOs, and civil society. (6,73,74) In 2021, the committee organized a workshop with the purpose of assessing the effectiveness of activities undertaken by the national committee. Members from the government, public institutions, and NGOs attended the workshop. (9)
Autorité de Régulation et de Contrôle des Marchés des Substances Minérales Stratégique (ARECOMS)	Created under a 2019 mining decree, ARECOMS is a regulatory agency tasked with overseeing "strategic mineral" supply chains, such as cobalt and coltan, to ensure children, pregnant women, and other vulnerable populations are not working in mining sites. (29,75) ARECOMS has regulatory oversight over the Entreprise Générale du Cobalt (EGC), which is a subsidiary of the state-owned mining company Gécamines. (75) The EGC has exclusive authority to buy and sell artisanally-mined cobalt and aims to ensure price stability and fairness by removing unregulated middlemen from the supply chain, thereby decreasing the potential for child labor. (37,75,76) In 2021, the EGC created a responsible sourcing standard that supports the establishment and maintenance of safe and strictly controlled artisanal cobalt mining zones in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC). The EGC Standard will apply to all sites overseen by EGC and has been designed to go beyond regulatory compliance as determined by ARECOMS. (77) Currently, however, ARECOMS is not operational, and the EGC lost its monopoly on purchasing strategic minerals in May 2022. (78,79)
Child Soldier Monitoring, Verification, Demobilization, Reintegration Mechanisms	Includes the Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration Commission (UEPN-DDR), which coordinates verification and release of children associated with armed groups. Working with the MOGF, the UN Organization Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUSCO), UNICEF, and NGOs, refers demobilized child soldiers to social service providers for family reunification and reinsertion. (6,63,64) The commission is led by MOD's Children Associated with Armed Forces and Armed Groups Unit. (63,64) In addition, the Country Task Forces on Monitoring and Reporting, which is co-chaired by the UN, documents all grave violations committed against children. With UN support, the Centers for Transit and Orientation in North Kivu Province provided psychological counseling, basic education, and job skills training to ex-child soldiers during the reporting period. (9)
Joint Technical Working Group	Coordinates the implementation of the UN Child Soldiers Action Plan and activities at the provincial level in North Kivu, South Kivu, and Orientale provinces. Led by the Ministry of Gender and Family and includes representatives from four other ministries and the UN. (1,12,14,80) In addition, organizes training on child soldier screening, monitoring, verification, and demobilization processes, and participates in advocacy events. (1,14,31,81) Research was unable to determine whether any activities were undertaken during the reporting period.
Inter-ministerial Committee in charge of Monitoring Child Labour in Artisanal Mining (CISTEMA)	Chaired by the Ministry of Mines, CISTEMA coordinates efforts to eradicate child labor in the DRC's mining sector and serves as an adviser to other ministries addressing child labor in mining. During the reporting period, the committee completed an assessment report of their coordination efforts during a USDOL COTECCO workshop. (82)
Agency for Prevention and the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (APLTP)	Investigates, prosecutes, and sentences traffickers, including government officials complicit in human trafficking. Advocates on behalf of survivors of trafficking. (1,37) Embedded in the Office of the Presidency, replaces a previous trafficking in persons working group. Includes government officials from PNC and FARDC, local NGOs, and international organizations that formulate, coordinate, monitor, and evaluate government efforts to address human trafficking. (1,37) During the reporting period, the committee met 50 times and held five technical working group meetings. (1)

The creation of APLTP in April 2019 addressed a long-standing need to increase coordination among various anti-human trafficking actors within the government. (37) Nevertheless, overlapping objectives and duplication of efforts, combined with a lack of resources and trained personnel, may have impeded the government's ability to coordinate actions to address the worst forms of child labor. (9,16,63) In addition, the Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration Commission is supposed to take the lead on child soldier issues; however, research indicates that, in practice, that role has often been assumed by the Country Task Forces on Monitoring and Reporting. (63)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including a lack of implementation.

National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2012–2025)	Developed by the National Committee to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor in consultation with UNICEF to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in the DRC. (4,9,83) Promotes the enforcement of laws prohibiting the worst forms of child labor; universal primary education, monitoring and evaluation efforts, and improved coordination of stakeholders. Also seeks to raise awareness of the worst forms of child labor, empower communities to stop child labor practices, and provide prevention and reintegration services. (4,9,83) The original plan, which was set to expire in 2020, was extended to 2025 during the reporting period. (9)
Child Soldiers Action Plans	The DRC has several key policies to address children in armed conflict. The UEPN-DDR's National Disarmament, Demobilization, Repatriation, Reintegration, and Resettlement (DDR III) plan aims to provide rehabilitation and reintegration services to demobilized combatants, including children. (1,14,84,85) DDR III is implemented with UN and international support and within the 2013 Framework Agreement for Peace, Security, and Cooperation for the DRC and the Great Lakes Region. (84,86,87) Requires children separated from armed groups to be immediately transferred to UNICEF. (63) The Action Plan to End the Recruitment and Use of Child Soldiers (Child Soldiers Action Plan) is a UN-backed plan that aims to prevent and end the use of children in armed forces, provide support and reintegration services, pursue accountability for perpetrators, and create a partnership framework for the UN and the government. (88,89) Includes standard operating procedures for age verification to help the FARDC avoid underage recruitment. (1,14) In 2021, the MOD worked with MONUSCO and UNICEF to identify and remove child recruits from the FARDC and non-state armed groups. (9,90)
Action Plans to Address Child Labor in Mining	Includes the National Sectoral Strategy to Combat Child Labor in Artisanal Mines and Artisanal Mining Sites (2017–2025), which was developed by the Ministry of Mines and seeks to eradicate child labor in artisanal mining by 2025. The strategy aims to strengthen relevant laws, improve data collection on the prevalence of child labor in the mining sector, promote responsible sourcing regulations, improve child protection measures, and build stakeholder capacity to address these issues. (91) During the reporting period, the Ministry of Mines organized a workshop to operationalize this strategy. (7,37) In addition, the government allocated $10.8 million (19 billion Congolese Francs) to the ministry to reduce child labor in the mining sector. (7) The government is also cooperating with the Public-Private Alliance for Responsible Minerals Trade to end child labor in the cobalt sector. (37) In 2021, mining police in Walikale and Rubaya worked with the human rights NGO Association for the Development for Rural Initiatives to conduct community awareness-raising sessions on child labor to encourage families to bring children sent to mines back home. (8)
Agency for Prevention and the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons' (APLTP) National Action Plan (2020–2024)	Addresses all forms of trafficking in persons, including foreign-born and domestic survivors, as well as child soldiers. (37) Aims to prevent human trafficking through national awareness-raising and government training programs, survivor identification and care, and law enforcement cooperation and coordination. (37) During the reporting period, APLTP worked with the Ministry of Social Affairs, the Ministry of Health, and the Ministry of Labor to provide care to child trafficking victims. (9)
National Action Plan Against Sexual Violence in Conflict	Supports UN Resolution 1325 on women, peace, and security, which aims to prevent the recruitment of children, particularly girls, into armed groups, provide social services upon their release, and ensure perpetrators are prosecuted. (92,93) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this policy during the reporting period.

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (94,71,95,96)

Although the DRC has developed a number of action plans to address child labor, only some received dedicated funding. (13,63,25)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem in all relevant sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Programs to Support Vulnerable Children†	Aim to improve child protection with the support of donors and the government. Includes the Support Project for Alternative Welfare of Children and Young People Involved in the Cobalt Supply Chain (PABEA Cobalt), an $83 million project funded by the African Development Bank and implemented by the Ministry of Social Affairs, whose purpose is to ensure the social reintegration of children working in cobalt mines; a $4 million Government of Japan-funded program that aims to provide education, vocational training, reintegration kits, and school feeding programs to 13,000 children and to construct a training center for youth in North Kivu Province; a $97 million Government of Canada-funded program that aims to assist 95,000 at-risk youth living near mining sites; and a MINASA and NGO program to reintegrate children removed from the street into communities and to reunify children formerly associated with armed groups with their families. (1,6,14,63,97,98) The government-run Center for the Transit and Orientation of Young Children in North Kivu Province also provided psychological counseling, basic education, and job skills training to ex-child soldiers. (37)
UNICEF-Funded Education Programs	Under the auspices of the government's Free Primary Education Program, and with support from UNICEF and Global Partnership for Education, the Ministry of Primary, Secondary and Technical Education continued to provide free primary education for children up to the age of 12. (8,9,99,100) Since the beginning of the pandemic, UNICEF distributed 135,619 workbooks in 12 provinces, and provided 6,788 solar-powered radios to children in vulnerable households in 19 provinces to allow them to follow distance-learning classes. (100,101) UNICEF reached nearly 409,000 children through its Education in Emergencies packages. These children, who were unable to attend school due to conflict or natural disaster, were able to continue learning through educational programs on the radio, workbooks, and other learning tools. (102) In addition, nearly 450,000 exercise books were distributed, including to those living in remote areas of the country. (99-101)
USAID-Funded Projects	The USAID-PACT Sustainable Mine Site Validation (SMSV, 2018-2022) is a four-year cooperative agreement that aims to implement a technically and financially sustainable Mine Site Qualification and Validation model in North and South Kivu that adheres to the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development's Due Diligence Guidance for Responsible Supply Chains of Minerals; the International Conference on the Great Lakes Region; Regional Certification Mechanism; and DRC law. (103) The SMSV also aims to develop strategies to fight child labor, including by raising awareness of child labor issues among local stakeholders, and by building the capacity of mining inspectors and local stakeholder committees (CLS) to qualify and validate mine sites. (103) In addition, the Conflict-Free Gold Project seeks to create a transparent supply chain model for clean artisanal gold; Understanding Artisanal Mining Supply Chains and Conflict Financing in DRC is gathering reliable data to address 'conflict minerals' trade in Eastern DRC; and The Program for the Development of Eastern Congo (P-DEC) aims to adopt bottom-up peacebuilding approaches to reduce conflict and bridge social divisions. (104-106)
World Bank-Funded Projects‡	Projects in support of reestablishing peace and stability. Includes Education Quality Improvement Project (2017–2022), a $100 million project that aims to improve the quality of primary school education. (87,107) During the reporting period, over 10,000,000 textbooks and 251,997 teacher guides for reading and writing for grades 1-3 in the four national languages (Lingala, Swahili, Tshiluba, and Kikongo) were distributed throughout the DRC. (108)
USDOL-Funded Projects	Includes Measurement, Awareness-Raising, and Policy Engagement (MAP I6) Project on Child Labor and Forced Labor, a global project implemented by the ILO to conduct research and develop new survey methodologies, improve awareness, strengthen policies and government capacity, and promote partnerships to address child labor and forced labor. Along with IOM and the Walk Free Foundation, the MAP I6 project conducted research on forced labor, including forced child labor, in conflict zones in the DRC in 2018 and will publish that research in 2022. (109) Also includes Combating Child Labor in the Democratic Republic of the Congo's Cobalt Industry (2018–2022) (COTECCO), a $3.5 million project implemented by the ILO in Kolwezi, Lualaba Province, aimed at reducing child labor and improving working conditions in the mining sector; the Supporting Progress on Labor Standards in the DRC, a $3 million project implemented by the ILO to enhance the capacity of the labor inspectorate and improve working conditions; and The Global Trace Protocol Project, a global project that seeks to increase downstream tracing of goods made by child labor and forced labor. (28) During the reporting period, the provincial ministers of mines attended workshops funded by COTECCO in the provinces of Tanganyika, Haut Katanga, and Lualaba. The Mining Chamber of the Federation of Congolese Enterprises also participated in these workshops. (7,8,28) In addition, USDOL's COTECCO project conducted a training of trainers on advocacy strategy in Kinshasa with a second training in Kolwezi. (82) The training in Kolwezi brought together 50 participants, including 10 representatives of provincial government bodies, 12 representatives of CSOs, 10 attendees from the private sector, 4 representatives of union associations, and 5 representatives of implementing partners. (82) Additional information is available on the USDOL website.

† Program is funded by the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (110,111)

In November 2021, First Lady Denise Nyakeru Tshisekedi, in collaboration with the NCCL and World Vision, hosted an advocacy workshop on addressing child labor. The workshop recommended asking Parliament to consider increasing the budget for agencies working to address child labor issues in 2022. (9) In addition, the Ministry of Defense (MOD) worked closely with the UN to identify and remove child recruits in 2021. (1,37) However, the scope of child DDR programs remains insufficient, reintegration process is slow, funding is inadequate, and collaboration between partners is weak. (1,14,34) Furthermore, children separated from armed groups remain vulnerable to stigmatization and re-recruitment. In particular, girls, who make up an estimated 30 to 40 percent of children associated with armed groups, often survive prolonged sexual and physical abuse in captivity and face social exclusion upon their return. (12,34,112,113) There is also a lack of efforts to assist street children and programs to provide support to children engaged in forced labor in agriculture, domestic work, mining, and commercial sexual exploitation. (9,11,12,34,112,113)

In 2021, the Republic of the Congo made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the reporting period, the government conducted its first-ever nationwide child labor survey in coordination with the United Nations Children's Fund. The government also renewed a bilateral agreement with the Democratic Republic of the Congo that formalized regular bilateral collaboration to support trafficking victims and share information on suspected traffickers. In addition, the implementation of ministerial decrees aimed at protecting indigenous peoples' rights continued to result in an increase in the number of indigenous children enrolled in the school system. However, children in the Republic of the Congo are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and forced domestic work. The government has yet to accede to the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons, and existing programs are not sufficient to address the scope of child labor in all relevant sectors. In addition, the country lacks a national policy to address child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Republic of the Congo (ROC) are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in forced domestic work. (1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the ROC. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	25.4 (Unavailable)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	92.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	27.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		71.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2022. (6)

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 5 (MICS5), 2014–2015. (7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including in the production of manioc, peanuts, corn, plantains, potatoes, and sugarcane (1,4,8,9) Fishing (1,8)
Industry	Working in stone quarries,† including breaking stones (1,2,8,10,11)
Services	Domestic work (1-4,8) Market vending and carrying heavy loads‡ (1-4,8,9)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (5,8,12,13) Forced labor in farming, including in the production of cocoa, fishing, domestic work, and working in stone quarries (1,4,9,13,14) Forced labor in market vending and working in bakeries (4,13,14) Forced labor of indigenous Baka, Aka, and Kola children in farming, including in the production of manioc, and in fishing, hunting, and domestic work (1,4,9,14,15)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In some rural areas, the majority ethnic Bantu population forces non-majority, indigenous children—such as from the Baka, Aka, and Kola groups—to perform agricultural work, including forced work, for low wages and under the threat of physical abuse. Within the ROC, internal child trafficking networks relocate children from rural areas to urban centers for forced labor in domestic work and market vending. (2,4,8,13) In urban environments, children from West Africa work in forced domestic servitude for West African families in the major cities of Pointe-Noire and Brazzaville. (3,4) Many foreign children subjected to forced domestic work or commercial sexual exploitation in the ROC originate from the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and other West African nations, including Benin. (4,5,8,11,16) While the ROC conducted a national child labor survey, information on children's work is limited because the results have not yet been published. (13)

The Constitution stipulates that education is free until age 16; in practice, however, some parents are required to pay for books, uniforms, and school fees, which may limit access to education for some children. (1,17) Prohibitive school fees, the absence of sanitation facilities, a lack of teachers, and sexual abuse in schools also pose barriers to education for some children, particularly in refugee camps and non-urban areas. (1,2,4,8,18) Indigenous children throughout the country may experience discrimination, linguistic barriers, prohibitive school fees, and long distances to travel to schools. (2,4,8,10,17,19) The government offered an expenses subsidy—"tuition waiver"—for indigenous children, a program that provides money to families for students to buy uniforms, supplies, and procure health insurance, but research indicated that schools provided this waiver inconsistently during the reporting period. (8)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

The ROC has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MOL)	Enforces child labor laws. (17) Conducts initial inspections before referring cases to the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights (MOJ) for prosecution, and offers support to victims afterwards. (8)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights (MOJ)	Enforces criminal laws against the worst forms of child labor. Dedicates two judges to child protection cases. (1) Leads child labor law enforcement efforts. (8)
Ministry of the Interior's National Police	Enforces criminal laws against the worst forms of child labor and conducts initial investigations into cases of forced labor, human trafficking, and the use of children in illicit activities. Conducts operations to rescue trafficked children used in child labor. (1,2,4,8)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in the ROC took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MOL) that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including lack of sufficient resources.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

The government did not provide comprehensive information about labor law enforcement operations, such as number of inspections, violations found, and penalties applied, for inclusion in this report. (8) Research found inspectors do not have access to government vehicles and rely on the employers whose businesses are being inspected to provide transportation. (10,29) Although the government lacks a formal process for referring children found in situations of child labor to appropriate social services providers, individual labor inspectors may leverage personal connections with their counterparts in other ministries to refer children found during inspections to social services. (2-4,8) Further, training opportunities for labor inspectors, particularly for lower-level staff, are very limited due to a lack of resources, including budget shortfalls, and a lack of Internet access. (15,30)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in the ROC took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including insufficient allocation of financial resources.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

The government provides funding for investigations, prosecutions, and convictions of suspected traffickers in the context of broader judicial and law enforcement programs. (3) In general, the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights (MOJ), and the Ministry of Social Affairs, Humanitarian Action and Solidarity (MSA) experienced difficulties in prosecuting offenders due to a weak judicial system, poor recordkeeping, a large backlog of cases in the high court, courts that convene infrequently and irregularly, and criminal law enforcement officials' and judges' uneven knowledge of anti-trafficking legislation and the Child Protection Code. (5,15)

The MSA, MOL, MOJ, and the National Police work together to enforce criminal laws against child trafficking; however, their efforts are limited to Brazzaville and Pointe-Noire. In addition, the National Police sometime demand payments from NGOs and other stakeholders to assist in or execute operations to rescue survivors of child trafficking. (1,8,15) Police officers are not paid overtime, and there is a lack of resources such as funds for fuel. (8) Research found that many police did not understand what constituted child labor, and that court and MOJ personnel did not fully understand or know how to handle child labor cases. (4)

During the reporting period, the ROC worked with the DRC and Benin to prohibit minors from coming into the ROC without their parents as part of an agreement reached in 2020, and advanced proceedings to formalize these agreements as a domestic legal framework clarifying legal responsibilities under existing anti-trafficking laws. (9) The government also held a workshop for law enforcement professionals. (8) In 2021, the government repatriated eight trafficked children to Benin whose traffickers were convicted in 2019; the children received shelter, food, medical care, and psychological support. (8,9,13) Additionally, the ROC is working with the DRC to institute a reciprocal referral mechanism agreement that is identical to the one it has with Benin. (8)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including lack of adequate resources.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Ministry of Social Affairs, Humanitarian Action and Solidarity (MSA)	Promotes the rights of vulnerable groups and contributes to anti-trafficking efforts by providing social welfare assistance to survivors. (1,31) May conduct initial inspections before referring cases to MOJ for prosecution. (1) Through its Director General of Social Affairs, oversees government strategy to address human trafficking. (15) Through its Task Force, leads efforts to address human trafficking in Pointe-Noire, designates foster families to receive victims, and assists in repatriating or reintegrating victims. (1) Although there is a line item in the MSA's budget for activities to combat human trafficking, funds are disbursed irregularly or not at all. (15)
Anti-Trafficking Coordinating Committee for Pointe-Noire (MSA Task Force)	With UNICEF support, coordinates all efforts to address trafficking of West African children in Pointe-Noire. Chaired by MSA with representatives from other government agencies and civil society organizations. (1,3,5,14) Seeks to prevent and prosecute cases of human trafficking and provides support to survivors through placement with foster families. (5,32) The Committee did not meet during the reporting period. (8)
National Commission to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons	Coordinates government efforts on trafficking in persons and forced labor as a federal-level, interministerial committee. (3) Article 34 of the 2019 Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons provides a dedicated line item for funding. (33) The Commission did not receive funding from the government and did not meet during the reporting period. (8)

During the reporting period, the MOJ carried out a public awareness campaign to inform government officials, NGOs, and members of the indigenous community about their civil and political rights, gender-based violence, and the anti-trafficking law in the north of the country. (13) Also in 2021, the government signed a renewed bilateral agreement with the DRC which formalized regular bilateral conversations and collaboration to support trafficking victims and share information on suspected traffickers. Additionally, MSA staff maintained regular contact with counterparts in Benin about trafficking in persons issues, ongoing cases, and repatriation efforts. (13)

The government has not provided the MSA Task Force with a specific operating budget since 2014, limiting the Task Force's activities due to lack of funds. In addition, a local NGO has indicated that it refers cases to the Beninese consulate rather than the MSA Task Force because the majority of victims are Beninese and the MSA Task Force is unable to provide the NGO with financial support. (14,15) Furthermore, there is no coordinating body to oversee efforts to address child labor at the national level. (1,32)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including lack of a national child labor action plan.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Education Sector Strategy (2015–2025)	Developed as an update to the previous 2012–2020 strategy, focuses on the priorities of offering quality basic education for all, addressing the human resources needs for the country's developing economy, and creating mechanisms for the efficient management of an educational system. (34)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (15,16)

During the reporting period the government revised its national action plan to address trafficking in persons, holding several discussion meetings. However, a new national action plan was not adopted in 2021. (13)

Congo, Republic of the

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the Education Sector Policy (2015–2025), and research found no evidence of a general policy on child labor. (34) Furthermore, research did not discover a national action plan that addresses trafficking in persons.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including inadequate efforts to address child labor in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Safety Net Program (LISUNGI) and Additional Financing (2014–2022)	World Bank-funded project that grants improved access to health and education services to poor families in Brazzaville, Cuvette, and Pointe-Noire. (35) Includes a cash transfer program for households conditioned upon regular health visits and an 80 percent school attendance rate every month by the children of participating households. (2,35) During the reporting period, in response to the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic, the government reinforced its “Lisungi” social safety net program for approximately 200,000 households nationwide. Households received an additional $85 from the government's COVID-19 Solidarity Fund. (8)
McGovern-Dole International Food for Education and Child Nutrition Program (2017–2022)	$30 million United States Department of Agriculture-funded, 5-year project implemented by WFP in Bouenza, Cuvette, Lékoumou, Likouala, Plateaux, Pool, and Sangha. Aims to improve literacy of school-age children, increase healthy dietary practices, build capacity of government institutions, improve policy and regulatory frameworks, and increase government support and engagement of local organizations and community groups. (36,37) During the reporting period, the program fed as many as 380,000 children in the country. It has been renewed for an additional 5 years. (11)
Observe, Reflect, Act Schools	Ministry of Education program supported by UNICEF, the EU, and WFP to improve access to education for indigenous children through a 2- or 3-year program to prepare them for schooling. (11,38) Identifies children who should be added to the civil register; provides school supplies to students, and raises awareness among indigenous families about the importance of education. The schools continued to operate during the reporting period, but sources indicate that they are funded primarily by international organizations, private companies, or the local communities, and that teachers are unpaid and work on a voluntary basis. (9,11,30,39,40)

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (8)

During the reporting period, the MSA conducted the ROC's first-ever nationwide child labor survey in coordination with UNICEF. The survey results indicated the existence of a human trafficking ring, identified trafficking cases and efforts made by officials in addressing trafficking in persons, as well as gaps in coordination between security forces and social services on the ROC's borders with its neighbors. (13) Additionally, the implementation of six 2019 ministerial decrees aimed at protecting indigenous peoples' rights continued to result in an increase in the number of indigenous children enrolled in the school system, with one decree guaranteeing the right to a birth certificate and another the right to access primary schooling. (13,41)

Existing government programs are not sufficient to address the scope of child labor in all relevant sectors, such as domestic work or commercial sexual exploitation. (8)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in the ROC (Table 11).

Although research found no evidence that child labor exists in the Cook Islands, in 2021, the government made moderate advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. During the reporting period, the government approved the new National Youth Policy for 2021–2026 and opened its first Youth Hub for children, which will connect youth groups across the country in order to empower young people in their communities. Additionally, the Ministry of Internal Affairs collaborated with the United Nations Children's Fund Pacific office to draft a comprehensive report on its cash transfer program, which in part seeks to provide support to families with young children. However, the law does not criminally prohibit the use, procuring, or offering of a child for prostitution.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor exists in the Cook Islands. Table 1 provides one key indicator on children's education in the Cook Islands.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Primary Completion Rate (%)		122.4

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2020, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2022. (1)

The Ministry of Education has developed an Inclusive Education policy to ensure that children with disabilities and special learning needs are accommodated within the school system. The Ministry of Internal Affairs provides support for all related educational mandates. (2)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

The Cook Islands is self-governing in free association with New Zealand. (3,4) Since 1988, no treaty signed, ratified, accepted, approved, or acceded to by New Zealand extends to the Cook Islands, unless New Zealand acted expressly on behalf of the Cook Islands. (3) The Cook Islands has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 2).

Table 2. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 3). However, gaps exist in the Cook Islands' legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the prohibition of using children in illicit activities.

† Country has no standing military (11)

The Employment Relations Act prohibits children younger than age 13 from being employed. (5) The Act also prohibits a school-age person, defined as ages 13 to 16, from working during normal school hours, working for more than 10 hours a week outside of school hours, or doing work that is not considered light work. However, the legal framework does not determine the sectors in which light work is permitted. (5) The Cook Islands does not criminalize the use of children in illicit activities, particularly in the production and trafficking of drugs. (8) New Zealand is responsible for the defense of the territory at the Cook Islands' request. (9,11) While the Cook Islands provides free education to citizens, permanent residents, and children of permanent residents, children outside of these categories must pay a school fee. (10)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms. However, the Government of the Cook Islands has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 4).

Table 4. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Internal Affairs	Enforces labor laws through the Labor Division and provides child services. Leads implementation of the UN CRC. (3)
Cook Islands Police Service	Enforces child labor laws. (3)

Labor law enforcement on the Cook Islands lies with the Ministry of Internal Affairs' Labor Division's four labor inspectors. The Labor Division is responsible for monitoring labor protections and occupational safety and health. (3)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor. However, the Government of the Cook Islands has established policies related to child labor (Table 5).

Table 5. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Cook Islands National Youth Policy (2021–2026) †	Identifies priority areas for youth, including education and work opportunities, health, and youth risk and resilience. (2, 12) During the reporting period, the government opened its first Youth Hub, designed to provide a safe space for children in need of support and learning opportunities. (13)
National Policy Framework for Children (2017–2021)	Provided a framework to protect the rights of children, with outcomes focused on their health, education, safety, economic opportunities, and international connectivity. Aimed to protect the rights of children by strengthening data collection on children to improve the government's understanding of child abuse and children's experiences in the legal system, and by improving collaboration between the government, parents, and the community. (14) During the reporting period, the government continued to support the National Policy Framework for Children. (2)
United Nations Pacific Strategy (2018–2022)	A multinational strategic framework program consisting of 14 South Pacific nations. Addresses, develops, and implements strategic economic development priorities in the South Pacific, including eliminating child labor and the worst forms of child labor. (15) During the reporting period, the government continued to collaborate with UNICEF Pacific Islands as it continued its review of the Child Protection Policy and Strategic Plan for the Cook Islands. (2) Additionally, in April 2021, the Ministry of Internal Affairs worked with UNICEF to publish its report on the Cook Islands' social cash transfer program, which provides child benefits and other assistance to vulnerable populations. (16)

The government has not included child labor prevention strategies in the Cook Islands National Youth Policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the continued prevention of child labor in the Cook Islands (Table 6).

Table 6. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws criminally prohibit the use of a child for prostitution.	2012 – 2021
	Ensure that the law prohibits the use of children in illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs.	2015 – 2021
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under age 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016 – 2021
	Ensure that the law's light work provisions are specific enough to prevent children from involvement in child labor.	2017 – 2021
Government Policies	Ensure that the National Youth Policy includes provisions to prevent child labor.	2021
	Establish by law free basic public education for all children.	2021

In 2021, Costa Rica made significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The National Statistics Institute published a new household survey that included a child labor component measuring labor rates for children between the ages of 12 and 17. Furthermore, the government drafted and enacted new national action plans to combat child labor and human trafficking. Costa Rica also drafted a law to address migrant smuggling in an effort to address human trafficking, and drafted modifications to its trafficking laws. Meanwhile, the Ministry of Labor implemented a new guide to assist businesses in confronting child labor. However, children in Costa Rica are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also engage in child labor in agriculture, including in the production of coffee. Furthermore, the labor inspectorate lacks a sufficient number of inspectors.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Costa Rica are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also engage in child labor in agriculture, including in the production of coffee. (1-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Costa Rica.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	6.5 (46,509)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	98.4

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor in the agriculture, construction, fishing, street vending, and commercial sectors (4,14,18,19)
	Domestic servitude (14,20)
	Use in transporting or selling drugs, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (17,21)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in Costa Rica, including migrant children, are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, particularly in tourist destinations, border areas, and in the Northern and Pacific coastal zones. Costa Rica is also a destination country for child sex tourism, particularly with tourists from Europe and the United States. (17,20,22) Migrant children, typically from Nicaragua and the Dominican Republic, are subjected to forced labor in agriculture, domestic servitude, and commercial sexual exploitation. (16,17,22)

In 2021, the National Statistics Institute published the 2021 National Household Survey, which included data on children between the ages of 12 and 17 and found that 1.3 percent of children within this age group were working. The last comprehensive child labor study that included all relevant age ranges was conducted in 2016. (21)

A third of children engaged in child labor in Costa Rica work in agriculture, with the highest incidences of child labor occurring in coastal regions, in provinces such as Limon, Puntarenas, and Guanacaste. Migrant, indigenous, and Afro-descendant children are at the greatest risk of labor exploitation. (23,24) Most of these children are between the ages of 15 and 17 and work primarily in the informal sector. (21)

Although preschool and general basic education are free and compulsory, children in rural areas, girls, LGBTQI+ youth, and children from indigenous and Afro-descendant communities face challenges, such as discrimination and gender stereotypes, in accessing and completing their education. (1,3,25) As a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, the government paused in-person and virtual instruction from May to July of 2021. Research found that the pandemic had a significant impact on equal access to education, with families living in poverty less likely to be able to benefit from remote education opportunities. (21,26)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Costa Rica has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Costa Rica’s legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the prohibition of military recruitment by non-state armed groups.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Articles 3, 78, 92, and 101 of the Childhood and Adolescence Code (25)

† Country has no standing military. (33)

‡ Age calculated based on available information. (25,33)

In May of 2021, the National Coalition against Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants (CONATT) approved a modification to the Penal Code that would remove the requirement of proof of force, fraud, or coercion for trafficking in persons cases in which the trafficker exploited a victim's vulnerability. However, in 2022, Costa Rica's human rights committee voted to archive the bill. (36,37) During the reporting period, CONATT also made modifications to a draft bill to confront the smuggling of migrants. The bill has yet to be sent to the National Assembly. (21,37,38)

Two bills drafted in 2019 to amend the country's comprehensive list of hazardous occupations had yet to be sent to the National Assembly, pending interagency commission review and Ministry of Labor approval. The draft bills would restrict the participation of minors in public presentations and shows, particularly routines that pose the risk of death, have content contrary to morality, are performed during restricted hours, or interfere with compulsory education. (14,21,39) The bills would also restrict some fishing activities. (14)

As Costa Rica's minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Costa Rica

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MTSS)	Monitors and enforces provisions in the Labor Code related to child labor, including conducting inspections and verification at worksites to ensure children are not engaged in hazardous labor or engaging in work that compromises a child's education. (25) Through the Office for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker (OATIA), responds to and attempts to prevent child labor through policy development and public awareness campaigns. (40) Protects adolescent labor rights by conducting school and workplace visits, providing referrals to government services, and writing socio-labor studies and technical reports to inform policies and programs. (25)
Attorney General's Office	Enforces criminal laws protecting children, including laws prohibiting forced child labor, human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation of children, and the use of children in illicit activities. (7,12,41) Coordinates efforts with the Judicial Investigative Police, the Immigration Police, the Uniformed Police, and municipal police forces. Also coordinates with other government agencies (the National Child Welfare Agency, the Social Security System, the Ministries of Education and Health, the Civil Registry, and other agencies), as well as with non-governmental organizations, international organizations, and diplomatic missions. (21)
Judicial Investigative Police	Investigate child labor violations, including child trafficking, child commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities. (16)
National Child Welfare Agency (PANI)	Leads the coordination of government and civil society efforts in child and adolescent protection. (42) Ensures that child labor victims receive social services, including temporary shelter, legal advice, counseling, and reintegration into the educational system. (25)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Costa Rica took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MTSS) that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including insufficient resource allocation.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Labor inspectors identified 33 cases of minors working, though no cases involved children under the age of 15. Of the cases identified through inspection, inspectors cited eight illegal dismissals and two labor rights violations. (21) During the reporting period, the Office for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker (OATIA) conducted two virtual trainings for Labor Inspection Office officials on the worst forms of child labor as well as trainings for inspectors with less than 4 years' experience on topics such as adolescent work, sexual exploitation of children, and trafficking in persons. (21) Overall, OATIA trained 1,285 public officials on child labor issues in 2021. (21)

In 2021, MTSS published the Responsible Business Practices Guide Against Child and Adolescent Labor in collaboration with the Costa Rica Business Network against Child Labor. The guide provides practical tools and specific actions businesses can implement to address child labor. (44,45)

Enforcement of child labor laws, particularly in rural areas and in the informal sector, is reportedly challenging due to insufficient funds for travel, facilities, and per diem costs incurred during inspections. (1,11,12,21,46) Informal work is more common in agriculture than in other sectors in Costa Rica. (2,21)

As the Labor Inspection Office has acknowledged, the number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Costa Rica's workforce, which includes more than 2.3 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Costa Rica would employ about 156 inspectors. (47)

The government did not provide information on the number of worksite inspections conducted or number of penalties imposed or collected for child labor violations for inclusion in this report.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Costa Rica took actions to eliminate child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including insufficient training for criminal investigators.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Yes (14)	Yes (21)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Yes (14)	Yes (21)

Number of Investigations	31 (14)	15 (21)
Number of Violations Found	12 (14)	15 (21)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	4 (14)	5 (21)
Number of Convictions	2 (14)	2 (21)
Imposed Penalties for Violations Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Yes (14)	Yes (21)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (14)	Yes (21)

In 2021, the National Child Welfare Agency (PANI) reported processing one case of child labor exploitation and forced begging and one case of labor exploitation. Meanwhile, CONATT reported one case of labor exploitation and forced begging in which the child was trafficked by their parents and a case of a Nicaraguan child trafficked for labor exploitation. (21) PANI also reported investigating 385 cases of child commercial sexual exploitation that included cases of use of children in pornography and child trafficking. (21) In addition, the Attorney General's Office reported it had identified 15 victims of child trafficking in cases involving commercial sexual exploitation, forced begging, forced labor, and irregular adoption. It also identified one case of child pornography. (21) Through the Angel Watch Program, a joint operation with the U.S. Embassy in Costa Rica to combat child sex tourism, Costa Rican immigration authorities denied 75 U.S. citizen registered sex offenders entry into Costa Rica. (36)

Reports indicate that the judiciary, prosecutors, and the police require additional staff, training, and resources to identify victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, refer victims to appropriate social services, and investigate, prosecute, and convict perpetrators. Due to the pandemic, the government issued significant budget cuts that further reduced resources for criminal law enforcement agencies. (16,19,21,44) In addition, a lack of training and resources for municipal-level authorities hampered the abilities of local governments to respond to cases that could involve the worst forms of child labor. (22) Costa Rica does not have a database to track human trafficking cases, making it difficult to target enforcement and prevention efforts. (19)

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including lack of sufficient resources to ensure coordination among relevant agencies.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
MTSS Office for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker (OATIA)	Coordinates government policies and programs to address child labor. (2) Oversees the Interinstitutional Coordinating Protocol for the Protection of Working Minors. (45) In 2021, OATIA led the process of reviewing and drafting a new National Strategic Plan against child labor, including holding workshops with various stakeholders. OATIA also worked to implement the second phase of the Child Labor Risk Identification Model, a tool developed in collaboration with the ILO that identifies areas at greater risk of child labor. (21) OATIA also piloted intervention strategies in the Limon province and in the Central Pacific region, such as opportunities for educational and employment access. (21)
National Committee for the Elimination of Child Labor and the Protection of Adolescent Work	Develops and promotes policy and program initiatives focused on eliminating child labor and regulating adolescent work. Overseen by OATIA and includes a technical secretariat that comprises representatives from various sectors. (46) In October of 2021, the committee approved the "Roadmap to make Costa Rica a Country Free of Child Labor and its Worst Forms 2021–2025," the new national action plan to address child labor. (48)
National Coalition against Migrant Smuggling and Trafficking in Persons (CONATT)	Leads government efforts to combat human trafficking and coordinates with OATIA and the National Commission Against the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents (CONACOES). (12) Coordinates anti-trafficking efforts among 22 public institutions, civil society organizations, and international organizations. Responsible for developing and implementing anti-trafficking policies, providing care to victims, prosecuting perpetrators, and providing training to government agencies. (22) During the reporting period, CONATT led efforts to draft and launch a new national action plan against human trafficking. (49)
National Commission Against the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents (CONACOES)	Prevents the commercial sexual exploitation of children and provides assistance and protection to victims. (12) Led by the National Council of Childhood and Adolescence; coordinates with OATIA and CONATT to address the worst forms of child labor. (12,50) Research was unable to determine whether the national commission was active during the reporting period.

Reports indicate that coordination is lacking between institutions responsible for investigating the worst forms of child labor and those providing social services to victims. (21) OATIA has reported that its office needs additional staff to better assist children engaged in child labor and their families. In addition, OATIA has noted that its office shares one vehicle with two other MTSS units, which limits its ability to provide oversight of child labor programs. (41)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies that are consistent with relevant international standards on child labor (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Roadmap against Child Labor and the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2022–2025)†	Approved in 2021 and launched in early 2022, aims to eradicate all forms of child labor in Costa Rica by 2025 in part by strengthening efforts to identify and track hazardous child labor, and by increasing social awareness of and collaborative efforts to address child labor. (21,51)
National Policy against Trafficking in Persons (2020–2030)†	Enacted in 2021, outlines goals and actions in the area of preventing and combating trafficking in persons and smuggling of migrants, as well as strengthening trafficking in persons investigations and sanctioning criminals. (49,52)
Interinstitutional Coordinating Protocol for the Protection of Working Minors	Outlines provision of services for child laborers through collaboration between MTSS, PANI, the Ministry of Public Education, and the Joint Institute of Social Assistance (IMAS), and their regional and local agencies and the private sector. (53) The government implemented the protocol during the reporting period, as demonstrated by referrals of child labor cases to various support agencies. (21)
National Plan for Development (2019–2022)	Outlines the government's objectives, priorities, and goals in the use of resources and in the implementation of policies, plans, and projects over a 4-year period. The plan incorporates labor rights, child welfare and development, and poverty reduction, and integrates child labor as an indicator for establishing decent work and reducing employment insecurity. (7,54) During the reporting period, the government initiated and published the results of a comprehensive verification study measuring the results of the plan, which showed the government had exceeded its labor related goals as of 2021. (55)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the accessibility of programs to all relevant groups.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Bridge to Development†	Aims to reduce poverty and eliminate vulnerability, including child labor, by providing social services to families in poor communities. (56,57) In 2021, the government indicated the program had thus far served 77,000 families since its inception, with 19,000 more families acquiring benefits in 2021 and an expected 110,000 more families in 2022. (58)
Face of Justice Shelter†	NGO-run shelter for child victims of human trafficking that provides PANI-funded monthly subsidies and care from full-time staff, including a trauma psychologist and health practitioner. (18,19) The shelters remained operational during the reporting period. (59)
Houses of Joy (Casas de la Alegría)†	Public-private alliance that provides culturally sensitive daycare and meals to Ngäbe-Buglé, indigenous children whose parents work on coffee farms in Coto Brus. Aims to promote social inclusion and developmental opportunities for indigenous children and provide an alternative to child labor during the coffee harvest. (10,12,60,61) IMAS funds meals, caregiver salaries, and training; farm owners provide the land and classrooms, with financial contributions from UNICEF for building and teaching materials. (1,50,60) The program continued in 2021, with the government providing 25 children daycare services through an investment of $4,000. Eight additional "Casas de Alegría" were opened in the cantons of Coto Brus, Puntarenas, and Tarrazú, providing care to an additional 269 children. (21)
Let's Get Ahead Program (Avancemos)†	IMAS program that provides monthly conditional cash transfers to low-income families to keep children in school and out of exploitative work. (2,62) The government indicated it had provided cash transfers to at least 248,000 students in the beginning of 2021 and expected to offer services to an estimated 387,000 students over the course of the year. (63)
USDOL-Funded Projects	Youth Pathways to Leadership, Learning, and Livelihoods in Costa Rica, $3 million project implemented by Youth Build International. During the reporting period, the project distributed laptops and provided internet connectivity to project participants. (64,65) Promoting Apprenticeship as a Path for Youth Employment in Argentina, Costa Rica, and Kenya through Global Apprenticeships Network (GAN) National Networks, $3.3 million multi-country project that worked with employers, government agencies, civil society organizations, and other actors to promote apprenticeships and other types of work-based training opportunities for vulnerable youth; the project saw significant growth in membership in the beginning of 2021. (66,67) Implementing a Culture of Labor Compliance in Costa Rica's Agricultural Export Sector, $2 million project implemented by the Foundation for Peace and Democracy (FUNDAPEM); in 2021, the Ministry of Labor completed a roadmap for the implementation of a new digital system designed to improve labor inspectorate capacity, including collection of fines and administration of inspections. (68,69) Measurement, Awareness-Raising, and Policy Engagement (MAP 16) Project on Child Labor and Forced Labor, global project implemented by the ILO to conduct research and develop new survey methodologies, improve awareness, strengthen policies and government capacity, and promote partnerships to combat child labor and forced labor; in Costa Rica, supports the Regional Initiative Latin America and the Caribbean in its work to develop child labor risk maps and policy responses with the government and, during the reporting period, initiated the second phase of the Child Labor Risk Identification Model in Limón. (70,71) For additional information, please see our website.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (72,73)

In 2021, Côte d'Ivoire made significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ivorian government eliminated school fees in January 2021 and increased the number of labor inspectors by 10 percent. The government also hired 150 field staff to support labor inspectors in cocoa farming zones and drafted a new National Sustainable Cocoa Strategy to Fight Deforestation, Child Labor, and Low Farmer Incomes in the cocoa sector. In addition, the First Lady and Head of the National Committee for Surveillance inaugurated a third center for survivors of trafficking, exploitation, and child labor located in Ferkessédougou. However, children in Côte d'Ivoire are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in the harvesting of cocoa and coffee. The government does not have a mechanism to assess civil penalties for labor law violations and the lack of financial resources and personnel may have hindered labor law enforcement efforts.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Côte d'Ivoire are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in the harvesting of cocoa and coffee. (1-3) According to a Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey conducted in 2016, 21.5 percent of children ages 5 to 17 are engaged in hazardous work. (4) In addition, NORC at the University of Chicago released a report detailing findings from a sectorally representative survey conducted in Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana during the cocoa harvesting season of 2018–2019. This report found an increase in child labor (and hazardous child labor) in cocoa production during the 10 year timeframe since the survey in 2008–2009. (5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Côte d'Ivoire. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	25.6 (Unavailable)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	70.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	21.8
Primary Completion Rate (%)		80.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2020, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2022. (6)

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 5 (MICS 5), 2016. (4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children from Côte d'Ivoire are subjected to human trafficking for forced labor in domestic work within the country and North Africa. Children are also brought from neighboring West African countries to Côte d'Ivoire for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor, including in begging, cocoa production, and artisanal mining. (2,11,15,16)

School is mandatory for children ages 6 to 16 in Côte d'Ivoire. Although the Law on Education provides for free education, students are often required to pay for textbooks and uniforms, which may be prohibitive to some families. (2,9,19-23) In addition, birth registration identity documents are required for students to take entrance exams for secondary school, posing a barrier to continued education beyond primary level. It is estimated that there are approximately one million children who do not have these necessary documents. (3)

A shortage of teachers, poor school infrastructure, lack of transportation systems in rural areas, inadequate sanitation facilities, and violence have negatively impacted children's ability to attend school. (2,3) Research also suggests that some students are physically and sexually abused at school, which may deter some students from attending school. Because of this, roughly one in four girls in Côte d'Ivoire are not able to attend primary school. (2,9,20,24,25)

Results from the International Cocoa Initiatives' Child Labor Monitoring and Remediation System indicate that children working in hazardous working conditions increased, which is at least partially attributed to the COVID-19 pandemic. (26) Research showed that despite an upward spike in child labor during the partial government shutdown as a reaction to the pandemic, in cocoa producing areas the level of child labor returned to pre-pandemic levels at the end of the partial government shut down. (27) Research also indicates that between 2008 and 2019, there were significant increases in cocoa production and, during that time, child labor in high producing zones remained stable. However, in small- and medium-producing zones, child labor increased. (5,10) During this time though, there was an increase in children attending schools in cocoa-growing areas. (5,10)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

The Ivorian government followed through on previously reported commitments to reduce costs related to schooling by eliminating school fees in January 2021. (3) Further, the government continued revising the civil code to include more specific designations of the minimum age at which certain types of work can be performed. (2)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of child labor laws.

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment and Social Protection (MEPS)	Develops, proposes, and enforces all labor laws, including those related to child labor. (2,9,36,37) The Anti-Trafficking Unit, a Sub-Directorate, and the Ministry of Women, Family, and Children provide support to victims of child trafficking and other forms of child labor. (2,15) MEPS has authority over the child labor monitoring system, Système d'Observation et de Suivi du Travail des Enfants en Côte d'Ivoire (SOSTECI), which enables communities to collect and analyze statistical data on the worst forms of child labor. As of the preparation of this report, there are 20,000 local SOSTECI committees in operation for the purpose of improving local coordination and exchange of information on child labor and child welfare in cocoa production areas. (2,3,7,9,12) The General Labor Directorate in Abidjan coordinates the regional offices and their efforts to address child labor. (9,17,38)
Ministry of the Interior and Security	Through its Anti-Trafficking Unit, leads efforts to enforce criminal laws against child trafficking. Through its Brigades Mondaine (Vice Squads), addresses commercial sexual exploitation, including the exploitation of children. (2) Through its Unit for Combating Transnational Organized Crime, supports UNODC's West Africa Coast Initiative, which aims to improve cross-border cooperation to address crimes, including human trafficking. (35,39) The government reports having increased the annual budget of the Anti-Child Trafficking and Juvenile Delinquency Division Unit ( La Sous-direction de la Police Criminelle chargée de la Lutte Contre la Traite d'Enfants et la Délinquance Juvenile [SDLTEDJJ]), from $10,000 in 2018 to $200,000 in 2021. This budget covers the operation of the six regional branch offices and the central bureau in Abidjan. (3) In 2021, SDLTDEJ gained 200 police officers to increase regular investigations in the cocoa production zones and to patrol borders for child trafficking. (3)
Ministry of Defense	Through its National Gendarmerie, investigates child labor violations in rural areas where there is no police presence. (2)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights	Investigates and prosecutes crimes related to child labor, including its worst forms. Through its Directorate of Judicial Protection of Childhood and Youth, assists with investigations and implements the ministry's child protection policy. (2) The Ministry of Justice and Human Rights is charged with rehabilitating children who have been detained or arrested. (9)
Ministry of Women, Family, and Children	Leads the government's efforts to address human trafficking and implements a National Policy on Child Protection. (2,40) Provides support to child labor victims in coordination with MEPS. (2,41) During the reporting period, the Ministry of Woman, Family, and Child established 1,150 community action groups to address child labor. These action groups were a part of a national mapping project to geolocate and create data profiles on cocoa farms and farmers. (3)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Côte d'Ivoire took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Employment and Social Protection (MEPS) that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including human resource allocation.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

During the reporting period 25 offices were newly equipped with vehicles. In addition, the government rehabilitated several labor inspectorate facilities, provided equipment, and provided fuel for vehicles to increase the number of site inspections. (3)

The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Côte d'Ivoire's workforce, which includes approximately 8,747,000 workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Côte d'Ivoire would need to employ roughly 584 labor inspectors. (42,43) Labor inspectors are also tasked with dispute conciliation, which may detract from their primary duties of inspection. (28,44) The labor inspectorate suffers from a lack of resources, including insufficient staff. (3,36,37) While some labor inspections are done in the informal sector, the majority of the inspections are done in the formal sector where child labor is less likely to occur. (9,45,46)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Côte d'Ivoire took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including human resource allocation.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021

While the government provided data on investigations, violations, prosecutions initiated, and convictions related to child labor and its worst forms, research was unable to disaggregate this information from other information related to child abuse. (3) However, in May 2021, the government organized an operation called "Coup de Poing NAWA 2," in the town of Soubré, an intensive cocoa production zone, in which 68 children were removed from working in cocoa farms. The Anti-Child Trafficking and Juvenile Delinquency Division (SDLTEDJ) transferred the victims to the government's center in Soubré, where they received psychological and educational assistance. (3) Some victims remained at the center instead of returning to their families. They attended school or learned skills, such as animal husbandry, horticulture, tailoring, hairdressing, or iron works. (3) Defendants in this case were prosecuted in the department of Soubré; five defendants were prosecuted for child trafficking and received sentences of 20 years' imprisonment, while 17 defendants were convicted of dangerous forms of child labor and received sentences of five years' imprisonment. (3)

The Anti-Trafficking Unit continued to lack the resources and personnel to adequately enforce criminal child labor laws throughout the country. (3,46,47)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including a lack of coordination of data collection among ministries and regions.

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Monitoring Committee on Actions to Combat Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (CNS)	Supervises, monitors, and evaluates all government activities related to child labor and child trafficking, including making policy recommendations and harmonizing laws with international conventions. (2,46,47) Chaired by the First Lady of Côte d'Ivoire and comprises 16 international and domestic partners. (2,14,15,46,48) During the reporting period, CNS collaborated with the governmental Coffee and Cocoa Council (Conseil Café Cacao, or CCC) to contract 150 individuals who were trained in child labor investigations to support the work of the Ministry of Employment and Social Protection (MEPS) labor inspectors in cocoa farming zones. These CNS contractors are equipped with motorcycles and smartphones to provide farming households with information about stopping child labor and are authorized to collect information on child labor in order to support reporting of cases of trafficking, exploitation, and child labor to competent authorities. (3)
Inter-Ministerial Committee on the Fight Against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (CIM)	Designs, coordinates, and implements all government actions to address the worst forms of child labor, and monitors relevant programs implemented by partner organizations. (46,48-50) Chaired by MEPS, includes representatives from 12 other ministries. (15,46,48,50)
National Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking (CNLTP)	Formed in support of the 2016 Anti-Trafficking Law and chaired by the Prime Minister, aims to fight human trafficking throughout Côte d'Ivoire. Oversees the implementation of the National Action Plan and Strategy Against Human Trafficking, coordinates government efforts, and monitors implementation of all projects related to human trafficking. (51) Includes representation at the local level through dedicated units charged with implementing the National Action Plan and Strategy Against Human Trafficking. (51,52) The Ministry of Women, Family, and Children serves as the executive secretariat and the committee comprises of 13 ministries. (17) During the reporting period, CNLTP organized a workshop with national committees to fight trafficking in persons from five other countries: Ghana, Togo, Benin, Guinea and Nigeria. (16)
Office of the First Lady	Engages with international partners on child labor issues in the cocoa trade and puts pressure on industry sourcing cocoa from Côte d'Ivoire to increase traceability. (16,53,54) The Ivorian First Lady's office remains the key driver of the government's anti-trafficking efforts. (53)
The National Committee for Sustainable Cocoa (Comité National pour le Cacao Durable, or CNCD) *	Responsible for implementing the National Sustainable Cocoa Strategy to fight deforestation, child labor, and low farmer income. During the reporting period, the committee drafted the National Sustainable Cocoa Strategy. (3)

* Created during the reporting period.

The MEPS and ILO with European Union funding organized a workshop/strategy meeting for the 16 members of the Tripartite Advisory Committee on International Labor Standards (Comité Consultatif Tripartite sur les Normes Internationales du Travail, or CCTNIT), to improve data collection related to international child labor and trafficking conventions. (3)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including insufficient funding of key national policies.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (2019–2023)	Coordinated by CNS and the Inter-Ministerial Committee to Combat Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor, aims to significantly reduce the number of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor by drawing on best practices and building on lessons learned from the implementation of previous national action plans. Priorities include increasing efforts to mobilize resources at the national level, reinforcing regional cooperation and public-private partnerships, incorporating worst forms of child labor considerations into national and sector-specific programming, and reinforcing the monitoring and evaluation of the national strategy for the fight against human trafficking and the worst forms of child labor. (55) During the reporting period, civil society, CNS, and the CIM gathered separately, to discuss progress implementing the National Action Plan for Combatting Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor. As a result, the First Lady and President of the CNS, Ms. Dominique Ouattara, extended the validity of the National Action Plan to 2023. (3)
2010 Declaration of Joint Action to Support the Implementation of the Harkin-Engel Protocol (2010 Declaration) and Its Accompanying Framework of Action	Joint declaration by the Governments of Ghana, Côte d'Ivoire, and the United States, as well as the International Chocolate and Cocoa Industry. (49,56,57) Provides key stakeholders with resources and facilitates coordination of efforts to reduce the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-producing areas. Aims to ensure that all project efforts implemented under the Declaration and Framework align with Côte d'Ivoire's national action plans to promote coherence and sustainability. (49,56-58) Governments of Ghana and Côte d'Ivoire; USDOL-funded projects; and some industry-funded projects carried out activities that support the spirit of this policy during the reporting period. (9)
Policies Involving SOSTECI	Aim to strengthen and expand SOSTECI. Include partnership agreement between the International Cocoa Initiative and CNS in support of the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor. (2) The Decent Work Country Program (2017–2020), in collaboration with ILO, aimed to improve working conditions, strengthen SOSTECI, and address the worst forms of child labor. (59,60) The National Development Plan (2016–2020) allocated almost $6.1 million over 5 years to conduct diagnostic studies on child labor and child trafficking, construct three child protection centers, and develop a national action plan to address human trafficking, particularly of girls. (61) During the reporting period, the government organized a workshop involving relevant stakeholders (e.g., MEPS, MOIS, CIM, CNS) to discuss SOSTECI's new provisions, rules, and procedures to support efforts to address child trafficking, exploitation, and child labor. In addition, the government provided training for 18 local SOSTECI committees located in Soubré. (3)
Labor Inspection Strategy (2019–2021)	Through the Ministry of Employment and Social Protection with assistance from ILO, aims to enable the government to ensure the application of legal provisions for the improvement of working conditions and the removal of children from work through the inspection of worksites, the provision of counseling, and monitoring. (13,45) In 2021, undertook activities related to building the capacity of the inspectors, monitoring of inspection units, and raising public awareness. (3)
Compulsory Education Policy	In support of the Law on Education, aims to achieve 100 percent enrollment in primary school by 2020 and 100 percent enrollment in junior high by 2025. (19) The government focused on increasing school enrollment in parts of the country where child labor is prevalent, such as in cocoa-growing regions. School enrollment of children in cocoa-growing regions increased from 59 percent in the 2008–2009 academic year to 85 percent in the 2018–2019 academic year. (8,9) During the reporting period, the government continued building schools and delivering school supplies to increase access to education. (3) However, there remains insufficient classroom space in rural areas for the number of students enrolled. UNICEF estimated the country needs another 30,000 classrooms. (9)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (62)

The government drafted a new National Sustainable Cocoa Strategy (Stratégie Nationale de Cacao Durable) to fight Deforestation, Child Labor, and Low Farmer Incomes in the cocoa sector. (3) In addition, the government organized a workshop to identify the strategic priorities to achieve Target 8.7 of the Global Sustainable Development Goals, which seeks to eliminate child labor. (3)

Over the first six months of 2021, the EU multi-stakeholder dialogue for sustainable cocoa level have had a series of roundtables, so-called Cocoa Talks, which delved into significant dimensions of sustainability which include efforts to address child labor. (63)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem in all sectors.

Côte d'Ivoire

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
ACCEL AFRICA	The program was co-funded by the European Union, under the Project "Accelerate action for the elimination of child labor in Africa's supply chains" ( Accélérer l'action pour l'élimination du travail des enfants dans les chaînes d'approvisionnement en Afrique , or ACCEL AFRICA). UNICEF and ILO representatives provided participants with strategies for synchronizing efforts to eradicate child labor. (64) During the reporting period, the government organized a workshop convening national and international experts to prepare a strategic plan for labor inspectors investigating cocoa farms. (3)
Industry Funded Projects	Aim to increase sustainability in the cocoa sector, improve farmer livelihoods and access to education – including increasing access to education opportunities for children – and address the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-growing areas. Some projects support the spirit of the 2010 Declaration. (59) In November 2017, the governments of Ghana and Côte d'Ivoire signed an agreement to fight deforestation and protect the cocoa supply chain. During the reporting period, private industry continued to implement the Cocoa and Forests Initiative to this end. (65)
Programs to Promote Education†	Aim to raise school attendance rates in rural areas, particularly among girls, by providing school meals, facilitating birth registration, and constructing community schools ( écoles de proximité ). Include the $42.5 million, WFP-funded Integrated Program for Sustainable School Feeding; the Ministry of National Education School Feeding Program; (66) the McGovern-Dole School Feeding Program, a $25 million joint initiative between WFP and the U.S. Department of Agriculture, in coordination with the Ministry of National Education, that benefited approximately 603,185 school children in FY 2020; (67) and the Millennium Challenge Corporation Compact Skills for Employability and Productivity Project, which formally approved 20 of the expected 84 villages which would host the secondary schools and $37 million for Technical and Vocational Education Project (TVET), which solicited proposals from private sector partners on the creation of TVET centers. (68)
World Bank-Funded Projects	Aim to improve access to education and provide poverty relief. Include: Productive Social Safety Net (2015–2024), which has supported 127,000 beneficiary households (representing 766,253 individuals) of which 47,435 are women the main recipients of the cash transfers. In addition, the Unique Social Registry (RSU) currently counts 315,925 poor and vulnerable individuals, while progress is being made in terms of timely digital payments to beneficiaries. (69-71)
USDOL-Funded Projects	USDOL projects in cocoa-growing areas of Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana aimed to eliminate child labor through research, monitoring, enforcement, and implementation and expansion of SOSTECI. These projects include: FLIP: $1,490,318 added to Verite-implemented project to expand work into Côte d'Ivoire in 2020. (72) CACAO: Implemented by Save the Children, $4,000,000 awarded in December, 2020. (73) Additional information is available on the USDOL website.

† Program is funded by the Government of Côte d'Ivoire.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (3)

During the reporting period, the government increased the 2022-2024 budget for the government's social services program (Programme Social du Gouvernement, or PSGouv) that funds child protection and anti-child-labor efforts, to roughly $5.5 billion (3,182 billion CFA). The primary focus of this fund is poverty reduction, which is viewed as the primary driver of child labor in Côte d'Ivoire. (3)

The First Lady and Head of the National Committee for Surveillance (CNS) inaugurated a third center for victims of trafficking, exploitation, and child labor located in Ferkessedougou. This center is operated by an NGO she supports called Children of Africa. (3,16)

In addition, the EU contributed $27.1 million to the sustainability of cocoa in Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, and Cameroon. The purpose of this project is to provide decent living income for farmers, reverse the effects of deforestation, and eliminate child labor. (74)

Despite an increase in activities, the scope of existing programs, including in cocoa, is insufficient to fully address the extent of the child labor problem in Côte d'Ivoire. (3,2) Current programming is not expansive enough, evidenced by the fact the child labor prevalence rate has not declined. The industry-funded NORC report—also released in October 2020—found that programs like the Child labor monitoring and remediation system (CLMRS), access to quality to education, programs to increase farmer yields and household income need to be scaled and expanded to impact more families. (5)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Côte d'Ivoire (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested

	Increase the number of labor inspectors to meet the ILO's technical advice.	2009 – 2021
	Disaggregate the information on criminal law enforcement efforts, including the number of convictions and penalties imposed for violations related to child labor and the worst forms of child labor.	2019 – 2021

In 2021, Djibouti made minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Labor began discussions with the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Women and Families about the creation of a formal mechanism to refer children found in child labor to appropriate social services. In addition, the labor inspectorate targeted inspections in the restaurant and construction sectors, in which child labor is believed to be more prevalent. However, children in Djibouti are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also engage in child labor in street work. Minimum age provisions apply only to children with a formal employment contract, which does not comply with international standards. In addition, the government did not make adequate efforts to enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor due to lack of financial and human resource allocations and reporting mechanisms. Finally, the government did not publish data on labor law or criminal law enforcement efforts for inclusion in this report.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Djibouti are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also engage in child labor in street work. (1,2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Djibouti.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	12.3 (23,693)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	67.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	10.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		64.8

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2021, published by the UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2022. (3)

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3 (MICS 3), 2006. (4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Caring for livestock, including goats (5)
Industry	Construction (2)
Services	Domestic work† (2,6)
	Street work, including vending, shining shoes, washing cars, and begging (2,7,8)
	Working in restaurants, small shops, and family businesses (2,6)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1)
	Forced domestic work and begging (1,9,10)
	Use in illicit activities, including the selling of marijuana (5)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Reports suggest that children, including undocumented migrant girls, are vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation in Djibouti City and along the Ethiopia-Djibouti trucking corridor. (1,11) Djibouti is also host to the largest number of foreign military installations in the world, including thousands of military personnel and security contractors. This foreign military presence heightens the risks of commercial sexual exploitation of girls. (12) Djibouti is a common transit country for mixed-migration flows from Ethiopia, Yemen, the East Africa region, and the Arabian Peninsula, and children from these regions are vulnerable to exploitation. (2,8)

Djibouti's primary school enrollment rate increased from 75 percent to 92 percent between 2009 and 2019. (13) However, enrollment rates are lower for girls and for all children living in rural or impoverished areas, making these children more vulnerable to child labor. (14) Although primary and middle schools are tuition free, other school-related expenses may prevent children from attending school. (15,16) Documentation and birth registration is sometimes a barrier to accessing education. Children must have a birth certificate or UNHCR refugee documentation to attend school, and thus undocumented migrant children and asylum seekers waiting for status determination are often unable to access education. (2) Despite the passage in 2017 of a National Refugee Law, which guarantees education as a fundamental right to refugees and asylum seekers lawfully residing in Djibouti, over 40 percent of refugees ages 6 to 16 were not enrolled in school. (17-19) Children in rural areas, where access to documentation is limited, also face obstacles to obtaining birth certificates. (6)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Djibouti has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	16	Article 5 of the Labor Code (20)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 108 and 110 of the Labor Code (20)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Article 110 of the Labor Code (20)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 2 and 290 of the Labor Code; Article 23 of the Law Regarding Terrorism and Other Serious Crimes (20,21)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 1 and 5–7 of the Law on the Fight Against the Trafficking of Persons and the Illegal Smuggling of Migrants; Article 23 of the Law Regarding Terrorism and Other Serious Crimes (21,22)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Articles 394, 396, 462, and 463 of the Penal Code; Articles 1 and 5–8 of the Law on the Fight Against the Trafficking of Persons and the Illegal Smuggling of Migrants (22,23)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 355, 356, and 461 of the Penal Code (23)

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article I of the National Army Amendment Decree (24)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	N/A*
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Articles 149–151 and 461 of the Penal Code (23)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Articles 4 and 14 of the Law on the Orientation of the Education System (25)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 16 of the Law on the Orientation of the Education System (25)

* Country has no conscription (26)

The Labor Code's minimum age provision applies only to children who perform work under a formal employment agreement, which does not conform to international standards requiring the protection of all children under the law establishing a minimum age for work. (20,23,27) Djibouti's hazardous work provision is also incomplete. Although the Labor Code prohibits the employment of children between the ages of 16 and 18 in domestic work, hotels, and bars, Article 111 calls for the creation of a more complete hazardous work list, which has not been adopted. (20,23,27) Furthermore, laws do not specifically criminalize the use of a child for prostitution. (22,23)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforces all labor laws, including child labor laws and regulations. (9) Through its General Inspectorate of Labor and Social Laws, regulates youth employment. (6)
Djibouti National Police, including the Brigade for Minors	Enforce criminal laws and investigate crimes related to child labor. (9)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecutes child labor cases referred by MOL. (9)
National Commission on Human Rights	Receives complaints and investigates cases of human rights violations, including child labor. (28) Assists victims in obtaining legal aid to prosecute violators. (28)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Djibouti took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor (MOL) that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including insufficient financial resource allocation.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Starting in 2021, the labor inspectorate dedicated one of its five inspectors to child labor inspections. (2) During the reporting period, inspections targeted the construction and restaurant industries, in which children often work. (2)

The labor inspectorate has only one vehicle, which limits inspectors' ability to conduct inspections outside of the city of Djibouti. (2) In 2021, the labor inspectorate conducted only 6 inspections. The exceptionally low number of worksite inspections conducted in Djibouti may have impeded the enforcement of child labor laws. (2) The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Djibouti's workforce, which includes approximately 250,000 workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Djibouti would need to employ roughly 6 inspectors. (29,30) While the law includes a mechanism to impose monetary civil penalties, in practice, the labor inspectorate currently issues warning letters outlining how to remedy the situation in order to avoid a penalty. (2) While there is no formal mechanism to refer children found during labor inspections to appropriate social services, the MOL has initiated discussions to create one with the Ministry of Women and Families and the Ministry of Education. (2)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether criminal law enforcement agencies in Djibouti took actions to address child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021

The government did not provide information on its criminal law enforcement efforts regarding training for investigators, the number of investigations, the number of violations found, the number of prosecutions initiated, the number of convictions, or the number of penalties imposed for inclusion in this report. (2) NGOs communicate human trafficking indicators to the police, who refer these cases to the prosecutor's office. (5,27,31) The NGO Caritas International implements separate memoranda of understanding with the Ministry of Women and Families and the National Commission of Human Rights. (8,31)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including efforts to address all forms of child labor outside the scope of human trafficking.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Anti-Trafficking Working Group	Coordinates efforts to address human trafficking through the development of a collaboration and outreach strategy focusing on the operationalization of the National Action Plan on Trafficking in Persons (2015–2022). The interagency working group is led by the Ministry of Justice and includes representatives from the MOL and the Ministry of the Interior. (32,33) During the reporting year, the Anti-Trafficking Working Group did not hold regular meetings. (2)
National Council for Children	Coordinates, implements, and monitors child protection policies and programs. Guides and defines government policy on child protection, including efforts to implement the Convention on the Rights of the Child. (34) Led by the Prime Minister and includes eight other agencies, representatives from NGOs, the private sector, and elected officials. (35) Advocates for (1) newborn refugees and migrants to receive birth certificates; (2) education under governmental programs for refugees and asylum seekers; and (3) family reunification for unaccompanied migrant minors. (5) Research was unable to determine the activities of this body during the reporting year. (2)
Ministry of Women and Families	Creates child protection policies and coordinates their implementation. The ministry also develops and implements programs to address all forms of violence against children. (6,8) Through its National Policy for Children in Djibouti, focuses on the survival, development, protection, and participation of children. (6,31) The working group includes representatives from the Ministry of Justice, the National Police/Gendarmerie, the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Health, the National Women's Union, the infant orphanage Daryel, and the National Agency for the Disabled, all of which coordinate efforts on the care of children at risk and child survivors of violence. (8) Research was unable to determine the activities of the Ministry of Women and Families during the reporting year. (2)

While various bodies coordinate efforts to address child protection and trafficking in persons, there is no active coordinating body dedicated to preventing and eliminating other forms of child labor.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including lack of policy to address child labor in its worst forms.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on Trafficking in Persons (2015–2022)	Aims to strengthen the legislative framework to address and prevent human trafficking, protect and assist human trafficking survivors, and establish a national referral mechanism between law enforcement officials and social services providers. (36) During the reporting period, the government appointed a single focal point for the implementation of this plan, and it convened an interministerial meeting to discuss trafficking in persons. (37)
Government of Djibouti Policies	Includes the National Policy for Children in Djibouti (2018–2022), which sets out fundamental rights for children, including access to basic social services and mobilizes national resources toward these ends. (38) The National Strategic Action Plan for Children in Djibouti, which was renewed in 2017, provides political and strategic guidelines for implementing the country's child protection policy. (39) The National Social Protection Strategy (2018–2022) seeks to broaden social protections for vulnerable children and youth. (38) During the reporting year, as part of the National Policy for Children, the government continued to work to expand school enrollment. (2)
National Strategy for Migration†	Promotes aid and livelihoods for migrants in Djibouti. Raises awareness for the rights and humanitarian needs of migrants. Facilitates coordination between humanitarian partners and the government through the National Coordination Office for Migration. Launched during the reporting year with the assistance of the IOM. (40)
UNDAF (2018–2022)	Focuses primarily on programs that build capacity for survivor recognition and protection and assists the government in the development of its "Vision 2035" plan, which is aligned with the UN 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development. The government has launched or expanded several new policies and programs under this framework, including a revised Social Protection Strategy. (38,41) This policy continued to be implemented during the reporting period. (37)

While the government of Djibouti had policies to address trafficking and other forms of child welfare, research found no evidence of a policy to address child labor, including its worst forms. (2)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Ministry of Women and Families Programs†	Includes the Social Assistance Program (2016–present), which provides children and their families in vulnerable communities with education and in-kind support. (38) Similarly, the Support Project for Girls and Women in Precarious Situations (2017–present) is a multisectoral program aimed at reducing girls' economic and social vulnerability through education and training. (38) The Country Strategic Option Program (2019–2024) is a rural poverty-reduction program established under Djibouti's revised Social Protection Strategy. (38,42) Djibouti's Support Program for Children with Academic Difficulties, established in 2017, aims to provide academic support for children from low-income families. (38) The Ministry of Women and the Families continued to implement these programs during the reporting year. (2)
Comprehensive Refugee Response Framework	Government commitment, under the UNHCR, to provide refugees with access to education, healthcare, employment, and income generation. (8) The government and its partners continued to implement and expand this program during the reporting period. (37)
UNICEF Country Program, (2018–2022)	Aims to ensure children's rights and welfare by reducing child mortality, improving access to basic education, and reducing children's vulnerabilities by providing access to social protection services. Operates coordination with the Government of Djibouti, the WFP, the Global Partnership for Education, the WHO, and other partners. (43) Includes efforts to ensure access to education for refugee children, improve birth registration, and address child trafficking. (43) During the reporting year, UNICEF supported COVID-19 testing and vaccination efforts, provided treatment for 3,250 children under the age of 5 suffering from malnutrition, furnished school supplies to children, including refugees, and provided services to 500 street children. (44)
World Bank-Funded Programs	The Integrated Cash Transfer and Human Capital Project (2019–2022) seeks to expand the social safety net system and provide basic services in targeted poor communities, primarily through conditional cash transfers. (6,45–47) The Expanding Opportunities for Learning Project (2019–2024), a $28 million project, supports Djibouti's efforts to expand access to quality education for 35,000 at-risk or underserved children, including girls, refugees, and disabled students. The Government of Djibouti and the International Development Association (IDA) agreed to co-finance the program, which aims to expand access to and improve retention in primary and lower secondary education for disadvantaged and vulnerable population groups. (48,49) The project also plans to build the capacity of teachers and administrators in underserved areas. (18,48,50) Both programs continued during the reporting period. (47,51)
WFP Djibouti Country Strategic Plan (2020–2024)	Supports the government's priorities for achieving food and nutrition security through stronger partnerships to strengthen national capacity in school feeding, nutrition, social protection, emergency preparedness, agricultural production support for rural and urban women and men equitably, vocational training for peace and prosperity, and supply chain management. (8,52) During the reporting period, provided in-kind and cash benefits to 108,399 people to mitigate vulnerability and undernourishment, and provided specialized food assistance to 5,645 children under the age of 5 to address malnutrition and stunting. (52)

† Program is funded by the Government of Djibouti.

‡ The government had other programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (26,53)

During the reporting year, the Government of Djibouti, in line with the 2017 Djibouti Declaration on Refugee Education, continued working to implement its commitment to integrate child refugees into its national education system. (2,18,19,54,55) Furthermore, the government created a favorable environment for NGOs to operate programs for children, such as faith-based programs furthering the inclusion of children with disabilities in primary and secondary school. (37) Nevertheless, research found no evidence of programs to assist children involved in domestic work, street work, and commercial sexual exploitation. (2)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Although research found no evidence that child labor exists in Dominica, in 2021, the government made minimal advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to preventing child labor, including a program that improved school infrastructure and others that provided meals to students. However, Dominica's legal framework does not protect children from exploitative work outside of the school year, and the government has not determined the types of hazardous work prohibited for children. During the reporting period, the government did not respond to requests for information related to its efforts to address child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor exists in Dominica. (1)

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Primary Completion Rate (%)		113.9

Data from 2016 published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2022. (2)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Children from the Kalinago community face barriers to secondary education which could make them more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. Because there is no secondary school in the Kalinago territory, students encounter transportation and social integration challenges as they travel outside of the territory to attend school. (3-5) Schools have reopened after a year and a half of online learning due to the COVID-19 pandemic. (1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Dominica has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 2).

Table 2. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 3). However, gaps exist in Dominica's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the minimum age for hazardous work.

Article 46 of the Education Act prohibits the employment of children ages 5 to 16 during the school year, but allows students ages 14 and older to work during school vacations or in school-sponsored employment training programs without defining the conditions, specific activities, or number of hours permissible for light work. (6)

Pursuant to Section 7(1) of the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act, children under age 18 are prohibited from working at night, unless they are working with family members. The law does not otherwise prohibit the employment of children in work that is likely to jeopardize their health, safety, or morals. (11) Specifically, Dominica does not have national laws or regulations that define the types of hazardous work prohibited for children. The government also has not established a minimum age for hazardous work. (8) Dominica's laws related to forced labor are not sufficient because they do not criminally prohibit forced labor except when it results from human trafficking. In addition, laws related to child trafficking are not sufficient because they are limited to international human trafficking. (8) The government has not enacted laws or regulations explicitly prohibiting the use of children in pornography, pornographic performances, or illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs. (5)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms. However, the government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 4).

Table 4. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Labor Division, Ministry of Justice, Immigration and National Security	Conducts inspections and enforces laws related to child labor. (1,3) Authorized to conduct unannounced inspections at any location with employees and to take legal action against employers violating child labor laws. (12) Reports to police and social services those cases in which children are found in exploitative labor situations. (1)
Ministry of Health and Social Services	Helps enforce laws related to child labor. Reports any children who are found to be in exploitative labor situations to the police. (1)
Police Force	Enforces criminal laws, including those related to child labor. (3)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including lack of implementation.

Table 5. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Basic Needs Trust Fund	Caribbean Development Bank-implemented program supervised by the Ministry for Ecclesiastical Affairs, Family, and Gender Affairs that aims to reduce poverty through livelihood services, improved infrastructure, capacity-building projects, and technical services. (13) During the reporting period, upgrades on 3 schools, costing an estimated $2.3 million, were underway. (14)
Education Trust Fund†	Government-funded program implemented by the Ministry of Education and Human Resource Development to provide financial assistance for textbooks, transportation, registration, and exam fees to students in secondary school who would otherwise be unable to complete their education. (15) Although the program was active during the reporting period, research could not determine what activities were implemented throughout 2021. (16)
School Feeding Program†	Government-funded program implemented by the Ministry of Education and Human Resource Development to provide lunch to primary school students in targeted areas. (17) The program was active during the reporting period. (16)
Climate Resilience Agency of Dominica (CREAD) and Climate Resilience Act	Launched in 2018 in partnership with the Clinton Foundation. Funds, designs, procures, implements, and coordinates climate resilience projects, which include rebuilding and repairing major roads and infrastructure, including approximately 20 schools and 27 health facilities damaged by Hurricane Maria in 2017, and provides support for 8,500 farmers across the island. (18-20) In 2021, Dominica's former attorney general Francine Baron became CREAD's new chief executive officer. (21)
Chances†	Government-funded program implemented by the Ministry of Youth Development and Empowerment, Youth at Risk, Gender Affairs, Seniors Security, and Dominicans with Disabilities that supports an emergency residential shelter to provide short-term services to abused and neglected children. The shelter can accept victims of the worst forms of child labor. (22,23) The program was active during the reporting period, with 22 youths reported to be housed at the facility as of May 2021; however, research could not determine what activities were implemented throughout 2021. (16,24)

† Program is funded by the Government of Dominica

The Organization of Eastern Caribbean States and UNICEF published a National Child Protection Action Plan in May 2018 effective through early 2021 to guide the implementation of recommendations for Dominica's child justice framework. (25) Although the program was active during the reporting period, research was unable to determine whether Dominica has completed the recommendations or adopted the action plan. (16)

Although the government had existing social programs in 2021 that could address child labor, research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement most programs during the reporting period. (1,5)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the continued prevention of child labor in Dominica (Table 6).

In 2021, the Dominican Republic made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Directorate of Policies for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor hired 23 child labor specialists to work in the offices of the Local Labor Representations in the interior of the country. The Dominican Municipal League, the Dominican Federation of Municipalities, and the Ministry of Labor also undertook a new inter-institutional cooperation agreement to develop awareness and training programs for municipal government personnel to integrate local governments in efforts to address child labor throughout the country. In addition, the government prepared a labor inspection manual to provide guidance to labor inspectors on the actions they should take while carrying out labor inspections. However, children in the Dominican Republic are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Other gaps remain, including limited human and financial resources for the enforcement of child labor laws, including a lack of a sufficient number of labor inspectors and criminal investigators, and adequate facilities, transportation, and fuel. Labor inspectors also lack the authority to assess penalties for labor law violations, including those related to child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Dominican Republic are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-5) Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. (6,7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the Dominican Republic.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in the Dominican Republic are victims of commercial sexual exploitation, principally in tourist locations, such as coastal resorts and major urban areas. In addition, the Dominican Republic is a destination country for child sex tourists primarily from the United States, Canada, and Europe. (20,23) The porous border between Haiti and the Dominican Republic has allowed some Haitian children to be trafficked into the Dominican Republic, where they are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation and forced to work in domestic work, street vending, and begging. (1,2,5,24-27) Some children, including Haitian children and Dominican-born children of Haitian descent, also work in agricultural production, often alongside their parents, and live in communities that frequently lack basic services, including schools. (22) Large populations of children, primarily Haitians or Dominicans of Haitian descent, live on the streets and are especially vulnerable to human trafficking. During the reporting period, the government noted an increase in domestic human trafficking victims, specifically children, brought from the interior of the country to coastal tourist areas. (20)

According to reports, most children working in the country do so in the informal sector, mainly on family farms in rural areas. The child labor rates from rural areas are almost double of those in urban areas. (20) The National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONANI) officials observed in 2021 that Constanza and the southern part of the country have the highest incidences of child labor. (20)

Many Dominican-born persons of Haitian descent, including children, continue to remain in undocumented status because of a legal change that retroactively revised the Dominican Republic's citizenship laws, which declared that all persons born after 1929 to non-citizens in the Dominican Republic were not eligible for citizenship. As a result, thousands of people had their citizenship revoked, most of whom were children of Haitian descent. (28,29) Afterward, the government established new legal provisions aimed at providing legal pathways for these individuals to regularize their immigration status. Yet, many of those affected by the changes have been unable to obtain legal residency documents or have their citizenship reinstated. (28,29) In 2020, the outgoing President issued a presidential decree naturalizing 749 of these individuals, nearly all of them minors, but the decree has still not been brought into effect. (30,31) In addition, thousands of other applicants remain trapped in legal limbo. Although their cases have been approved, the government has not yet issued a decree finalizing the naturalization process. (30) Due to the slow implementation of the program, coupled with response measures for the COVID-19 pandemic, many applicants have seen their interim identity and residency documents expire. (30) NGOs report that applicants are often unable to renew their documents due to government office closures, high fees, and a requirement to present a foreign passport despite the fact that these applicants are Dominican-born. (30) Some Dominican-born children of Haitian descent have been deported. (32) Children of undocumented migrant parents, many of Haitian descent, are particularly vulnerable to labor exploitation because they may lack birth or residency documents. This increases the likelihood that these children may be denied access to education or may be engaged in child labor, including its worst forms, in part because labor inspectors may not be able to verify their ages. (1,3,4,24,33,34) In addition, children who remain in the Dominican Republic, after their parents have been deported to Haiti due to their undocumented status, are more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. (35)

Education in the country was provided remotely from November 2020 until mid-October 2021 due to the pandemic. (20) The government continued enacting several initiatives begun in 2020 to facilitate instruction, such as the procurement of 800,000 tablets and laptops and the use of television, radio, and take-home workbooks to reach students without access to computers or Internet. (31) However, coverage of these initiatives was inconsistent, especially in the poorest areas of the country. Reports indicate that remote learning tended to reinforce existing inequalities in education, since students with poor Internet connections or with parents unable to support their learning were at a disadvantage. (20) In addition, some reports indicate that children without documentation were sometimes denied access to laptops. (36)

National law guarantees free public education, requires that all children attend school until age 14, and prohibits exclusion of children from the educational system based on a lack of identity documents. (37-39) Parents are also instructed to obtain birth registration documents for their children, and the Ministry of Education provides free legal services to help parents obtain identity documents for their children. The Ministry of Education's Office of Community Participation is the point of contact to handle school-denial cases for children without identity documents and has reissued a directive to public schools, noting that all children must be allowed to attend school, regardless of their documentation. Parents may also appeal to the district government or the Ministry of Education's regional office if their child is denied educational access. (16,39) However, limited reporting indicates that, in some cases, school directors have denied children without identity documents access to education. (36) Moreover, the Ministry of Education's current Operations Manual of Public Education Centers incorrectly requires school administrators to request children to present identity documents to enroll in school. (40) The Ministry of Education also requires that students have a birth certificate on file in order for them to receive a high school diploma or school transcript after graduation, leaving those children without identity documents unable to prove that they have completed high school. Thus, limiting their ability to access university and vocational education or the formal job market. (20,39,41,42)

Teacher shortages and a lack of school infrastructure also create barriers to accessing education in the Dominican Republic. (17) In addition, a high percentage of students drop out at the primary and secondary levels. (2,29,43) These issues particularly affect children living in rural areas and in communities predominantly of Haitian descent. Sources indicate that some children of Haitian descent face discrimination by teachers and peers, travel long distances to schools, and are unable to afford school fees and supplies. (2,29,43)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

The Dominican Republic has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓

	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in the Dominican Republic's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the prohibition of military recruitment by non-state armed groups.

* Country has no conscription (50)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (44,51)

The prohibition against child trafficking is insufficient because it requires threats, the use of force, or coercion to be established for the crime of child trafficking under the Law Against Migrant Smuggling and Trafficking in Persons; and although the Code for the Protection System and Fundamental Rights of Boys, Girls, and Adolescents criminally prohibits accepting, offering, or transferring children without requiring threats, the use of force, or coercion as an element, it does not criminally prohibit the recruitment or harboring of children. (37,47)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MT)	Leads efforts to eliminate child labor; conducts labor inspections, and oversees the Directorate of Policies for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor. Refers children found in exploitative conditions to social services, mainly the National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONANI). (17,52)
Office of the Attorney General (AG)	Prosecutes crimes involving children, including criminal violations related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children and other worst forms of child labor. Oversees the Special Prosecutor for Migrant Smuggling and Human Trafficking, which receives notifications of alleged violations related to the worst forms of child labor through a hotline. (4,22,24,53,54)
National Police	Enforces criminal laws, including those prohibiting the worst forms of child labor; and coordinates with the Office of the Attorney General in the prosecution of perpetrators. Under the Ministry of the Interior. (13,22,24,31,53)
Tourist Police (POLITUR)	Prevents child sex abuse and commercial sexual exploitation in tourist areas, rescues child victims, and arrests and brings to justice child sex offenders. Overseen by the Ministry of Defense. (17,20,22)
Local Vigilance Committees	Prevent child labor at the local level by alerting law enforcement of activities linked to child labor; directing survivors of child labor to social services, and working closely with the National Steering Committee to Eliminate Child Labor to raise awareness of child labor. (15,55) There are a total of 49 Local Vigilance Committees nationwide. (17,31,56-58)
National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONANI)	Develops and implements policies and programs to eradicate all forms of violence against children, including child labor, and improve the employability of young people. Coordinates with the Ministry of Labor through the National Steering Committee to Eliminate Child Labor to protect children against labor exploitation and enforce labor laws. (17,29,31)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in the Dominican Republic took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the authority of the Ministry of Labor (MT) that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including the lack of authority of labor inspectors to assess penalties.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In 2021, the MT reported that a total of 31 training sessions were held for the staff of the Directorate of Policies for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the inspection corps. Trainings included courses on child labor prevention, reporting and investigation techniques, health and safety, and equality of opportunity and non-discrimination. (20) MT hired one Creole-speaking staff member to assist with translation during inspections. Furthermore, training in the Creole language for labor inspectors is being programmed. In addition, MT hired 23 new technicians specialized in addressing child labor issues for the Directorate of Policies for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor, to work in the offices of the Local Labor Representations (RLT) in the interior of the country. (20) These technicians accompany inspectors during worksite inspections and to the orientations inspectors provide to different civil society groups. (31)

During the reporting period, labor inspectors carried out orientation sessions at sugarcane plantations to educate workers on their rights and responsibilities. These sessions emphasized that child labor is forbidden in the cultivation and harvesting of sugarcane, and that if seen, violations must be reported to the relevant authorities. (20) These sessions were translated into Creole and reached thousands of sugarcane workers in the country, including 2,000 sugarcane workers on the Central Romana sugarcane plantations. (20)

The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of the Dominican Republic's workforce, which includes more than 4.6 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, the Dominican Republic would need to employ about 312 labor inspectors. (59,60) In 2021, a total of 56,938 worksite inspections were conducted, representing approximately 269 worksite inspections completed by each inspector. This is a high number of inspections conducted by each inspector, and it is likely that this high number negatively impacts the quality of such inspections. (20)

Labor inspectors are authorized to re-inspect worksites to ensure that violations are remedied. However, re-inspections occur less frequently and are more difficult, and less consistent, in remote rural areas. (45) Labor inspectors do not have authority to assess labor penalties; instead, they write infraction reports which are sent to prosecutors in the Office of the Attorney General (AG) for enforcement action if prosecutors determine it is necessary. The collection of civil penalties is also the responsibility of the judicial system. (17) In 2021, MT referred 45 cases of child labor violations to the AG for further enforcement action. (20,31) MT reports that they only have oversight of work situations with an employer-employee relationship, leaving children engaged in work in informal activities outside MT's purview. In such cases, CONANI is the agency with authority and jurisdiction to intervene. (20)

The Labor Inspection Manual instructs inspectors to assess child labor violations by reviewing workers' identity documents and employers' records, making observations, and conducting interviews. (61) However, MT indicated that improvements could be made with respect to how inspectors conduct interviews, ask follow-up questions, and use inspection data to strengthen the inspection system to ascertain the ages of workers and guarantee that children under age 18 are not participating in dangerous or unhealthy work. Moreover, reports indicate that in some cases, Spanish-speaking inspectors working without translation assistance have been responsible for interviewing Creole-speaking workers with limited or no Spanish-language abilities, which may have hindered those inspections. (13,20)

Research indicates that inspections are not always conducted in a timely manner after complaints or requests for inspections that are based on compliance abnormalities or violations are made. In addition, evidence suggests that inspection reports often contain errors and contradictions that undermine the credibility of these reports. (13) Research also indicates that substandard labor inspections, incomplete labor inspection reports, and a lack of prosecutorial resources have hindered the ability of the AG to pursue prosecutions on criminal matters involving child labor issues. (13) A formal referral mechanism allows MT to refer child labor victims found during labor inspections to CONANI. (15,19) During the reporting period, MT reported that 468 children and adolescents were identified through labor inspections in rural and urban areas and were removed from child labor, while another 506 were warned and made aware of the consequences of child labor, with 204 of these being referred to institutions to receive services. These referred children include 157 to CONANI, 17 to the SUPERATE program, and 5 to the AG's Office. (20)

MT reports that its budget is insufficient for the maintenance of the required offices, transportation, fuel, and other resources needed to carry out adequate inspections. In 2021, employees and unions complained that an insufficient number of inspections were taking place, and that there was a lack of follow-through on the inspections that were carried out. (20,62)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in the Dominican Republic took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including insufficient allocation of financial resources.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Yes (17)	Yes (20)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A (17)	N/A (20)
Refresher Courses Provided	Unknown (17)	Yes (20)
Number of Investigations	Unknown (17)	Unknown (20)
Number of Violations Found	Unknown (17)	Unknown (20)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown (17)	Unknown (20)
Number of Convictions	3 (63)	Unknown (20)
Imposed Penalties for Violations Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Unknown (17)	Unknown (20)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (17)	Yes (20,31)

The government did not provide comprehensive information on its criminal law enforcement efforts during the reporting period.

During the reporting period, 155 trainees of the National Migration Institute received training on anti-human trafficking, while 25 trainees of the Tourist Police received training on child labor and human trafficking. In addition, members of the AG's Office received training on the worst forms of child labor and human trafficking. (20)

Reports indicate that the capacity of enforcement agencies to identify, investigate, and prosecute criminal cases related to human trafficking is limited due to a lack of human and financial resources. (4,13,24,30,64) The lack of an appropriate case tracking system also limits coordination between MT and the AG. Reports also indicate that some cases referred to the AG by MT are not subsequently investigated and prosecuted by the AG, which is partially due to this lack of coordination. (4,7,65) Moreover, research finds that CONANI does not have the resources, facilities, and institutional capacity to meet the demand for services nationwide. (1,2,4,66)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including insufficient funding for key coordinating bodies to carry out their mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee to Eliminate Child Labor	Develops policies, approves programs, and coordinates, monitors, and evaluates efforts to address child labor in the Dominican Republic. Overseen by MT and comprises ministerial representatives, labor unions, private sector representatives, and NGOs. (29,67) Oversees the system for referring children found during inspections to appropriate social services. (3) Also comprises local steering committees in each province that meet to coordinate government efforts. The committee met 6 times during the reporting period, while the steering committees carried out 665 meetings, and the Local Vigilance Committees held 117 meetings. (20) In these meetings they plan, organize monitoring, present complaints, and establish follow-ups for the prevention and eradication of child labor in each territory. All the institutions of the National Steering Committee to Eliminate Child Labor ( Comité Directivo Nacional ) participate, including governmental and non-governmental institutions such as neighborhood boards ( juntas de vecinos ), social and community organizations, clubs, associations, and others. (20) The sessions are held with the municipal boards of CONANI in each territory. In 2021, a total of 1,283 people (803 women and 480 men) participated in these meetings and orientations. (20) Meanwhile, 1,380 people participated in the 92 follow-up meetings held by the Directorate for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor. (20)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Agency Commission Against Trafficking in Persons (CITIM)	Coordinates efforts to address human trafficking and is responsible for developing and implementing national plans. Led by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and comprises 14 government agencies, including MT and law enforcement agencies. (24,68) Held two in-person meetings during the reporting period, and helped organize a high-level conference focused on comprehensive attention to survivors for World Day Against Trafficking in Persons on July 30, 2021. (69)
Social Policies Coordination Cabinet	Coordinates all social policies and conditional cash transfer programs, such as the SUPERATE program. Led by the Vice President. (13,31) In 2021, signed an agreement with the National Institute of Drinking Water and Sewage (INAPA) to join efforts to mitigate structural problems that hinder access to improved sanitation and basic services for communities in conditions of vulnerability. It also inaugurated technical-professional training centers as part of its Oportunidad 14–24 program. (31,70-72)
Cabinet for Children and Adolescents	Aims to provide effective protection for the rights of children and adolescents and promote their full personal and social development. (20,73) Chaired by the First Lady and coordinated by CONANI, it also coordinates and cooperates with civil society. (20) In 2021, together with CONANI and the National Institute for Comprehensive Care for Early Childhood (INAPEI), delivered to the Senate for the consideration of the legislature a draft of a law that seeks to guarantee comprehensive early childhood care. (74)
Cabinet of Women, Adolescents, and Girls*	Seeks to ensure the effective application and design of comprehensive public policies to prevent, address, prosecute, punish, repair, and eradicate violence, in its different types and spheres, against women, adolescents, and girls. (20) Established on January 5, 2021, it includes representation from government ministries and agencies, such as the Ministry of the Presidency, Ministry of Defense, Ministry of Education, the AG's Office, National Police, and CONANI. It also has representation from civil society organizations, and the Autonomous University of Santo Domingo. (20)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

During the reporting period, the Dominican Municipal League, the Dominican Federation of Municipalities (FEDOMU), and MT undertook a new inter-institutional cooperation agreement. Its purpose is to develop awareness and training programs for local government personnel to strengthen capacities for prevention and response to child labor. (20,75) It seeks to identify spaces and modalities of child labor in the municipalities, including the worst forms of child labor, to then execute programs and policies to address the issues identified. It is a means of integrating local governments in the efforts to address child labor throughout the country. (20,75) This initiative focuses on preventing the presence of minors in activities that pose any danger to their physical, mental, and emotional health, within public spaces such as: dumps, markets, cemeteries, parks, squares, and traffic lights, among others. (20,75)

Evidence suggests that the local and municipal committees of the National Steering Committee to Eliminate Child Labor face limitations in their coordination efforts due to a lack of financial resources to adequately carry out their mandates. (16)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including a lack of implementation of key national policies.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Education Pact (2014–2030)	Includes strategies to address child labor and seeks to improve the quality of, and access to, primary and secondary education by increasing attendance and graduation rates and enrolling more students in the Extended School Day Program. (76) Implemented by the Ministry of Education and supported by the World Bank. (20,76) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken during the reporting period to implement the Education Pact.
National Development Strategy 2030	Aims to reduce poverty and inequality and includes programs to address child labor, provide universal education to all children, and expand access to secondary school, including for students without identity documents. (19,77) During the reporting period, and for the ninth consecutive year, the government continued to allocate 4 percent of the nation's GDP to primary and secondary education as indicated by the National Development Strategy. The purpose of this continued funding is to improve the national education system. (3,7,17-20,78) Within the framework of this policy, the government announced on February 27, 2021, that it was, in partnership with Save the Children and the European Union, finalizing the standards for a new Certification Program for Child Labor Free Companies (ELTI-RD), for which MT will have responsibility. The government anticipates beginning a pilot of this program in 2022. (20)

On June 22, 2021, MT published the Institutional Strategic Plan 2021–2024, which aims to provide institutional strategies for the medium term in response to the current challenges facing the labor market. The plan includes objectives, lines of action, goals, and priority public policies that will guide the agency's work, including on the issue of the prevention and eradication of child labor and its worst forms. (31,79)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of efforts to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
SUPERATE†	Main poverty eradication strategy by the government that serves as the primary line of social protection actions. Focuses on social intervention through the integration of conditional cash transfers, socio-educational support, and links with other government programs and services. (80) Eight components help articulate its actions: educational inclusion; health, food security, and support in emergencies; economic inclusion; housing; identify yourself; care; woman overcome; and socio-familial accompaniment. (80) Addresses families in vulnerable situations, particularly low-income families, with one of its goals being to increase children's school attendance and reduce child labor. (80) During the reporting period, officials of SUPERATE met with the Permanent Commission on Childhood, Adolescence and Family of the Chamber of Deputies to identify opportunities for collaboration that can be articulated between SUPERATE and the Chamber of Deputies to benefit the vulnerable populations of children, adolescents, and women. (81,82)
Oportunidad 14–24†	Aims at reintegrating high-risk and socially vulnerable adolescents and young people into technical or vocational education and training programs. Provides adolescents and young people between ages 14 to 24 who have limited resources access to technical professional training, scholarships, a monthly provision of raw food, and transportation to study centers. (83–86) In 2021, opened more than 20 technical-professional training centers in different parts of the country to benefit socially vulnerable adolescents and young people to prepare them to enter the labor market or entrepreneurship. (87,88) The government also began administering the economic incentive for the youth who are participating in the program, which includes a monthly subsidy deposited in the accounts of participants receiving training for technical-professional careers. (89)
Extended School Day Program ( Jornada Escolar Extendida )†	Ministry of Education program to extend school hours to a full day (8 a.m. to 4 p.m.) to improve educational achievement and reduce child labor. (1) Due to the pandemic, the program largely lapsed for the 2020–2021 school year. (20) According to NGO reports, the school buildings remained open and were a distribution center for meals, which parents could collect for their families by turning in their children's homework notebooks. But the supervised instruction or mentoring that was previously available from the extended day programs was absent because teachers and students were engaged in virtual instruction. (20)
Line 700 Hotline†	Office of the First Lady's free hotline to enable citizens to report cases of the worst forms of child labor. (90) Reports indicate it was still active in 2021. (31)
Project to Reduce Child Labor and Improve Working Conditions in Agriculture in the Dominican Republic (FORMITRA) (2017–2022)	$5 million USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO. Aims to support the efforts of the Government of the Dominican Republic to address child labor and strengthen labor law enforcement in agriculture. (91) In 2021, supported the government in launching the Labor Inspection Manual, a systematization of good practices for labor inspections accumulated by the government. It collects in a single document the protocols and instruments of labor inspection used by MT currently, and all current and applicable regulations in employment relationships. (61) It provides guidance to labor inspectors on the actions they should take while carrying out labor inspections and specific guidance on which elements they should consider to determine whether violations related to child labor or forced labor are taking place. (61) During the reporting period, carried out 2 regional workshops on Child Labor for local MT representatives with 96 participants. (20) Additional information is available on the USDOL website.

† Program is funded by the Government of the Dominican Republic.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (2,83,92–94)

In 2021, MT reported that together with the International Justice Mission and other institutions, it developed a project for labor insertions for labor and commercial sexual exploitation survivors. The plan is expected to be implemented in 2022. (20) In addition, the government opened 15 new shelters for victims of gender violence, with facilities for children as well, and a separate specialized shelter for victims of human trafficking. (69) The Directorate of Policies for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor also carried out awareness campaigns on child labor, specifically involving the tourism and agricultural sectors, educational counselors and psychologists, and employers, unions, and commerce associations. The Directorate reported a total of 380 awareness, training, and roundtable meetings in which 7,447 people participated. (20)

Although the Dominican Republic has programs that target the worst forms of child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly to address commercial sexual exploitation of children and harmful work in the agricultural sector. (1,2)

NGOs report that child victims of human trafficking go to CONANI temporary homes until they are reunited with their families; survivors are not offered additional services. (20)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in the Dominican Republic (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

	Increase school infrastructure and teacher availability, especially in rural areas, remove supply and school-related fees, and expand efforts to reduce racial or nationality discrimination in schools.	2011 – 2021

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Social Programs	Update all Ministry of Education's school manuals to align with Dominican law guaranteeing that children without birth certificates or identity documents are able to enroll in schools and ensure that all children receive diplomas certifying school completion.	2017 – 2021

In 2021, Ecuador made significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Attorney General's Office trained over 2,000 prosecutors and administrative staff on sexual crimes against minors and trafficking in persons. The Ministries of Labor and Social and Economic Inclusion also developed inspection plans in the agricultural sector in rural areas, a sector that had previously been lacking in inspections, and worked with their counterparts in Colombia to establish mechanisms to address child labor in the illegal mining sector along the Ecuador-Colombia border. Under the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons, the government held various anti-trafficking trainings for labor inspectors, prosecutors, and police officers, among others. In addition, the Business Network for a Child Labor Free Ecuador – a public-private partnership helmed by the Ministry of Labor – also continued its work with 73 business entities, focusing on child labor issues in the priority sectors of bananas, flowers, fishing, and mining. However, children in Ecuador are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also engage in dangerous tasks in mining. Although the government continued efforts to eradicate child labor, the National Project to Eradicate Child Labor formally ended in December 2021 and a replacement program or institutional body has not been identified.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Ecuador are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also engage in dangerous tasks in mining. (1,2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Ecuador.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	8.2 (302,796)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	97.0

Although the National Council for Inter-Generational Equity worked closely with the Ministry of Economic and Social Inclusion (MIES) to complete a partial study on child labor that was published in early 2019, the government has not conducted a comprehensive nationwide child labor survey since 2012. Both government and civil society agree that a lack of updated statistics hampers efforts in eradicating child labor. (1,5-7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Civil society and government sources reported incidences of Peruvian adolescents being recruited under false promises of employment into forced labor in illegal mines in Ecuador. (1,16-18) Migrant and refugee children from Colombia and Venezuela are particularly vulnerable to street work, including forced begging. They are also vulnerable to exploitative labor practices in some parts of the fishing sector in the coastal region and artisanal mining in southern Ecuador and particularly in the northern province of Imbabura. (1,5,6,16,19) Indigenous children between the ages of 6 and 10 from the highlands are victims of trafficking in forced begging in Guayaquil and Quito, initially under false promises of employment. (1,9,20)

Migrant and refugee children from other Latin American countries and indigenous and Afro-Ecuadorian girls are used in child prostitution. (1,5,6,11,21) Child prostitution in Ecuador also occurs near illegal mining sites. (1,22) Venezuelan, Colombian, and Peruvian girls are victims of sex trafficking in Ecuador, particularly in irregular border crossing areas. (2,11,12) Networks for commercial sexual exploitation, including sex trafficking, also recruit children from schools, and, increasingly, through social media platforms. (2,19) Traffickers force children into criminality, recruiting them to engage in drug trafficking and robbery. (1,11)

Despite education being free in Ecuador, children face barriers to accessing education including lack of space and teachers, inadequate school infrastructure, teen pregnancy, and lack of transportation for children who must attend schools far from their homes. (5,6,16)

Due to the continued effects of the COVID-19 pandemic, the majority of an estimated 4.6 million students attended hybrid in-person/virtual schooling, or exclusively virtual schooling, during the reporting period. (1) A lack of access to the Internet or electronic devices increased absentee and dropout rates, especially in rural areas. (1) Reports indicate that approximately 110,000 children abandoned their studies as a result of continued school closures. (1) Reports indicate that as many as 65 percent of school-age Venezuelan refugee and migrant children are not enrolled in Ecuador's educational system. While identity documents are not required for attending school, some local officials demanded these documents for processing enrollment applications for refugee and migrant children. (1,6)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5).

Ecuador

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforces child labor laws. Through the National Project to Eradicate Child Labor (PETI), monitors and identifies cases of child labor; assesses penalties; promotes public awareness campaigns to prevent child labor; provides technical assistance to local governments on child labor; and identifies victims of child labor for the Ministry of Economic and Social Inclusion (MIES) to provide social services. (1,6) Using the Unified System of Registration of Child Labor (SURT), collects information on child laborers and refers children to appropriate government services. (1,6)
Ministry of Social and Economic Inclusion (MIES), Office of Special Protection to Vulnerable Populations	Conducts routine inspections in the informal sector for child labor and provides remediation services to child laborers and their families. (5,6,16) Through its Office of Special Protection to Vulnerable Populations, maintains a national anti-child labor program involving coordination with civil society organizations and local governments. (1,6) Finances the activities of these organizations at the local level and focuses on familial child labor and child labor in the informal sector. (1,6)
Attorney General's Office (AGO)	Enforces criminal laws against child labor and hazardous child labor, including the prosecution of cases. (8,17) The AGO's Specialized Victim Witness Protection Program provides immediate support and shelter to victims and witnesses willing to press charges and testify against their abusers, and coordinates referrals for further assistance with other government agencies. (17)
Ministry of Government (MOG)	Oversees the National Unit for the Investigation and Protection of Children and Adolescents (UNIPEN). (1) UNIPEN investigates all crimes against children, including abuse, sexual exploitation, sex tourism, smuggling, kidnapping, exploitative child labor, and forced labor. (1) UNIPEN's National Investigative Unit against Trafficking in Persons and Illicit Smuggling of Migrants also investigates child trafficking cases, assists victims, and arrests traffickers. (1,29)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Ecuador took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor (MOL) that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including insufficient human resource allocation.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Officials from the National Project to Eradicate Child Labor (PETI) accompanied labor inspectors for 5,990 verifications and labor inspections. They assisted labor inspectors in identifying child labor infractions and provided technical advice on current legal regulations and the process to hire adolescents between 15 and 17 years of age in permitted activities. (1) The MIES also participated in join inspections with the MOL in street stands, slaughterhouses, and other locations where child labor tended to be most prevalent. (1) The PETI program and the MOL proactively collaborated on inspection plans, prioritizing inspections in the agricultural sector in rural areas, a sector that had previously been lacking in inspections. (1,16) Although the MIES reported

5 child labor violations found, they reported 19 penalties imposed for violations of the worst forms of child labor because companies were found in violation under five different codes of the law. (15)

In 2021, there were 117 labor inspectors in Ecuador, a decrease of 43 inspectors from 2020. (1) The overall labor inspectorate budget and the PETI budgets both decreased in 2021. (1) There are also no inspectors in the country dedicated only to child labor issues. (1) The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Ecuador's workforce, which includes approximately 7.5 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Ecuador would need to employ roughly 502 labor inspectors. (33,34)

The MOL also reported that the labor inspectorate lacked the necessary resources, such as transportation and equipment, to fulfill its mandate. (5) Furthermore, inspectors do not have sufficient knowledge of child labor laws and lack training on identifying victims of trafficking in persons. (17,19) While Ecuador's labor inspectors do carry out inspections in the informal sector, they focus primarily on formal sector employment. (1) Although Ecuadorian laws and regulations governing child labor are comprehensive, those regarding hazardous work are not enforced equally in rural areas and family-run businesses. (1) The government does not publish information from the Unified System of Registration of Child Labor (Surti). (17)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Ecuador took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including a lack of resources to adequately investigate trafficking in persons cases.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Yes (32)	Yes (8)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A (7)	N/A (8)
Refresher Courses Provided	Yes (34)	N/A (14)
Number of Investigations	330 (32)	479 (8)
Number of Violations Found	Unknown (2,34)	Unknown
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	277 (32)	Unknown
Number of Convictions	Unknown (2)	Unknown
Imposed Penalties for Violations Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Yes (32)	Yes (8)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (32)	Yes (8)

The Attorney General's Office (AGO) reported finding 227 victims under the age of 18 involved in 6 types of criminal violations related to the worst forms of child labor in 2021. (1) They also reported that until November 2021, 32 minors were rescued and transferred to the Specialized Victim Witness Protection Program (SPAVT), 5 of whom were victims of trafficking in persons for the purpose of sexual exploitation. (1) The MIES assisted 11,700 children and adolescents vulnerable to child labor during the reporting period. (1) Numbers on convictions were also not available, but the AGO reported that 12 individuals were indicted or "processed" for child labor crimes during the reporting period. (1)

The AGO also conducted several virtual and in-person trainings through the Directorate of Training and Mission Strengthening during the reporting period. These included a training in April for over 2,000 prosecutors and administrative staff on sexual crimes against minors and a training in October for 29 prosecutors and administrative staff on anti-trafficking in persons efforts. (1) The MOG also conducted various trainings for labor inspectors, prosecutors, specialized police units, and other staff, including new employees from the National Police's specialized units on issues related to human trafficking and amendments to the Criminal Law. (1) Ecuador's Judicial Council signed a framework agreement with the Judicial Power of Peru to strengthen judicial cooperation on trafficking in persons crimes and other issues. (2)

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Civil society reports that the National Investigative Unit and La Dirección Nacional de Policía Especializada para Niños, Niñas y Adolescentes (DINAPEN) lack resources to investigate trafficking in persons cases adequately. (30) A reciprocal referral mechanism exists between law enforcement and social services for victims of human trafficking; however, civil society reports that the mechanism is at times ad hoc. (1) Shelters serve only girls who have been victims of sex trafficking. There are no specialized shelters for boys or girls who have been victims of labor trafficking. (2) Although the MIES will generally assign child victims to shelters depending on space availability, officials cite a lack of shelters in many provinces as a primary constraint in victim assistance. (5,16,19,35,36)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including a lack of provision of social services for victims of the worst forms of child labor.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Agency Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor	Coordinates government efforts to combat child labor. Includes participation from MOL, MOG, AGO, and MIES. (1,15) Regional councils on children and adolescence represent local governments on the committee. (5) Coordinated government efforts to combat child labor in 2021 under the Lenin Moreno administration, but following the change in presidents in May, did not meet again. (1) The government did not report any clear replacement body for this committee. (1)
Inter-Agency Sub-Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor (Mesa Interinstitucional de Erradicación del Trabajo Infantil)	Coordinates regional efforts to address child labor. (36) Participants include MIES; Regional Councils of Childhood and Adolescence; ministries of Education, Labor, and Interior; DINAPEN; and AGO. (35,36) Local committees worked with the MOL to coordinate work on child labor eradication and report cases of child labor via the SURTI system during the reporting period. (1)
Inter-Institutional Coordinating Committee for the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons and Illicit Traffic in Migrants	Coordinates government efforts to address human trafficking through prevention and the promotion of rights, the integral protection of the rights of victims, and investigation and sentencing. (37) Chaired by the Ministry of Government and established as part of the National Plan to Combat Human Trafficking, Sexual and Labor Exploitation, and Other Forms of Exploitation (1,37) This committee met periodically during the reporting period to coordinate anti-trafficking in persons efforts and developed a reporting mechanism to help schools deal with potential trafficking cases. (1,2)
Technical Secretariat for Ecuador's Growth Without Child Malnutrition	Establishes food and nutritional security as a national policy to improve children's health and nutrition as a baseline priority for youth wellbeing. (8) Created in May 2021 as a replacement for the previous administration's Technical Secretariat for the Lifetime Plan. (8)
National Council for Inter-Generational Equity (CNII)	Coordinates inter-agency efforts to protect the rights of vulnerable populations, including children. (38) The CNII provided feedback to the MIES on draft reforms to the Organic Code for Comprehensive Protection of Children during the reporting period. (1)

During the reporting period, the MOL and MIES worked with their Colombian counterparts to establish mechanisms to address child labor in the illegal mining sector along the Ecuador-Colombia border. (1) The MIES also launched a series of national roundtables in October to coordinate interagency actions to prevent and address child begging and child labor. The roundtables prioritized actions in 21 districts where street begging and child labor are most prevalent. (1) However, the MOL also reported that the ongoing pandemic and the change in presidential administration limited interagency coordination in 2021. (1) The government continues to struggle with ensuring that some children rescued from working in the informal sector receive adequate social assistance. (40)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including the lack of an active and permanent policy to address child labor.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Project to Eradicate Child Labor (PETI) (2018 - 2021)	Established a strategy to eradicate child labor in Ecuador by 2021 and prevent hazardous child labor in agriculture, manufacturing, construction, and mining. The project was led by the Ministry of Labor (MOL) and operated under the National Plan for Good Living. (8,16,41) The PETI program was implemented by the MOL as a pilot initiative, operated without a permanent budget guaranteeing a permanent dedicated directorate within the MOL in charge of efforts to combat child labor, and formally ended in December 2021. As such, the Ecuadorian government does not have an active national plan, program, or institutional body to eradicate child labor. (1) At the time of this report, MOL's technical teams continued to carry out work under this policy despite its formal closure. (1,15)
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2019–2030)	Aims to prevent, investigate, and impose legal sanctions against human trafficking with a focus on human rights, mobility, and gender, as the majority of victims in Ecuador are women. Launched in December 2019, the Action Plan includes U.S.-funded support through the IOM and is the government's first multi-sectoral plan on trafficking that establishes goals for every public sector institution to address human trafficking. (38-43) Under this plan, in 2021 the government held various trainings on trafficking victim identification, prosecution, and victim assistance to labor inspectors, prosecutors, and police officers, among others. The government also continued the #TogetherAgainstTIP (#JuntosContraLaTrata) national campaign. (1,2)
National Development Plan ( Plan de Creación de Oportunidades ) (2021–2025)	Under former President Moreno, the "Lifetime Plan" aimed to support vulnerable populations from birth to advanced age through a series of social welfare programs and reduce child labor of children ages 5 to 14 to 2.7 percent by 2021. (17,44) Moreno's plan was led by the Technical Secretariat for the Lifetime Plan. (45) Due to the presidential administrative change, the plan was not active after May 2021. (1) Under President Guillermo Lasso, the national development plan is called "Creating Opportunities" and focuses on job creation. (12)

The Ministry of Labor has reported its intention to establish a permanent institutional body dedicated to child labor to replace the PETI program, though no further clarification has been reported. (1)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including inadequate efforts to address all worst forms of child labor.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Business Network for a Child Labor Free Ecuador	Ministry of Labor and UNICEF initiative that seeks to gain commitment from participating industries to promote the prevention and elimination of child labor in their supply chains, trains businesses on child labor prevention, and creates employment opportunities for the parents of children engaged in child labor. (46) As a public-private partnership, it aims to exchange best practices and design strategies towards the progressive eradication of child labor among industries and their value chains. The program focuses on three geographic hubs in Azuay, Pichincha, and Guayas provinces. (6) In 2021, the program continued its efforts with 73 member companies specializing in the priority sectors of bananas, flowers, fishing, and mining. (1)
National Program to Combat Street Begging and Child Labor†	Seeks to raise awareness about child begging and aims to facilitate social services for children begging in the streets. (1) The Ministry of Social and Economic Inclusion (MIES) continued to coordinate this program in 2021 with various other government agencies including the MOL and the National Unit for the Investigation and Protection of Children and Adolescents (UNIPEN), intensifying the campaign in November and December over the holiday season when child labor tends to spike. (1)
Palma Futuro (2019–2022)	Six million dollar regional project funded by the U.S. Department of Labor and implemented by Partners of the Americas to improve the implementation of social compliance systems that prevent and reduce child labor and forced labor in palm oil supply chains. (47) In 2021, the Palma Futuro Project assessed the social compliance systems of its private sector partners and conducted trainings for their suppliers on child labor and forced labor risks. It disseminated information on the impact of the pandemic on labor conditions in the palm oil sector and worked with the private sector partners to develop and deliver messaging to palm oil workers about health and safety protocols during the pandemic. (48) For additional information, please see the USDOL website.
Youth Impulse ( Impulso Joven )‡	Seeks to increase job training and higher education opportunities for at-risk youth, support youth entrepreneurship through preferential loans, and connect employers with at-risk youth. (47) While activities under this program took place in 2021 prior to the change in administration, research could not determine whether it was active after that change. (1)

† Program is funded by the Government of Ecuador.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (17,47,48)

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Although civil society stakeholders commended the government's social programs, they reiterated that these programs only make limited interventions in sectors in which child labor is most prevalent, specifically the informal and agricultural sectors. (16) While the government used the social registry to provide additional social assistance payments to vulnerable families during the pandemic, research found that the registry had not been updated since 2015 and some of the most vulnerable families may have been overlooked for those payments. Civil society notes that an update to the social registry should prioritize the most vulnerable populations at risk of child labor. (1,6)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Ecuador (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Increase the number of labor inspectors to meet the ILO's technical advice.	2009 – 2021
	Ensure that the labor inspectorate is properly funded so that inspectors receive sufficient resources, including transportation and equipment, to carry out their duties adequately. Ensure that inspections sufficiently cover sectors in which child labor has been reported, including the informal sector.	2014 – 2021

	Enhance efforts to address exploitative labor practices and labor trafficking of migrant and refugee children.	2018 – 2021
	Enhance efforts to eliminate barriers and make education accessible for all children, including indigenous and refugee children and children from rural areas, by increasing classroom space and teachers, and addressing teen pregnancy issues and internet access.	2014 – 2021
	Ensure that all social programs that address child labor, including the Youth Impulse Program, continue to remain active and publish information on activities taken during the reporting period.	2019 – 2021
	Ensure that social programs make interventions in sectors in which child labor is most prevalent, specifically in the informal and agricultural sectors.	2018 – 2021
	Ensure that the social registry includes families most vulnerable to child labor by updating the list of recipients of social assistance.	2020 – 2021

In 2021, Egypt made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Prosecutor General's Office announced the opening of eight specialized prosecution offices to combat human trafficking and illegal migration crimes nationwide. Additionally, 121 new human trafficking investigations involving forced child begging were opened as a result of Ministry of Interior campaigns to combat child exploitation. The Egyptian Senate's Manpower Committee also submitted a draft labor law to the Speaker of the Senate for review. A separate proposed amendment would also allow the government to fine business owners 1,000 to 2,000 Egyptian pounds (64 to 128 USD) for violating the minimum age provisions, with double the fine for repeat offenses, and subject the business to the possibility of forced closure for up to 6 months. However, children in Egypt are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in quarrying limestone. The government did not publish data on the enforcement of child labor laws, and programs to address child labor are insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Egypt are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in quarrying limestone. (1,2,3,4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Egypt. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	4.9 (Unavailable)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	80.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	5.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		104.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2019, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2022. (5)

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey (DHS), 2014. (6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including the production of cotton (2,7-10)
	Tending livestock (10,12-15)
	Fishing, activities unknown (13,16)
Industry	Quarrying† limestone (1,2,7,15)
	Making bricks (1,2,7,17)
	Working in carpentry workshops (13,18)
	Working in marble workshops (19,20)
	Construction, activities unknown (7,10,17,21)
Services	Domestic work (2,7,14,17,22)
	Driving tuktuks (2,7,23)
	Repairing automobiles (2,7,24)
	Street work, including selling goods and collecting garbage (2,21,25)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Forced domestic work (2,4,16)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2,4,7,26,27)
	Forced begging (2,4,7)
	Trafficking of drugs, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Egyptian children are exploited in forced labor, domestic work, street begging, drug trafficking, quarrying, and agricultural work in Egypt. (4) Some children are forced by their immediate and extended families into sexual exploitation, begging, and domestic and factory labor. (4,27) In addition, some girls are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation under the pretext of temporary marriage, sometimes called "summer marriage," to wealthy foreign men, mostly from Persian Gulf countries. (2,7,26)

In April 2021, a 14-year-old boy was tortured and killed in a poultry slaughterhouse where he worked after reportedly asking to be paid. (28) Additionally, 8 children were killed when the truck transporting them, along with 15 other surviving child laborers, sank in the Nile River. (15) Reporting indicates that child labor is common among Egypt's thousands of poultry farms. (15)

Children in Egypt face barriers to education, including access to identity documentation and the associated costs of attending school. Enrolling in public school requires a certified birth certificate, which some children born out of wedlock in Egypt lack. (2) Children drop out of school because of school-related costs, such as educational supplies, transportation, clothing, and food. (2,9,13,16) A lack of qualified teachers, poorly maintained schools, sanitation issues, classroom density, lack of infrastructure, and bullying in schools also prevent some children from attending school. (2) In rural communities, children face difficulties due to long commuting distances. Girls face additional barriers to education, especially in rural Egypt, including harassment at on the way to school, as well as cultural barriers. (2,16,29)

The government offers refugee children access to the public education system; however, refugee children are subjected to racism and bullying, and face language barriers. In response, some non-Egyptians residing in the country, such as those from Sudan, have organized independent school systems unaffiliated with the government for their children. (2,30)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Egypt has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Egypt's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the prohibition of some forms of hazardous work such as brickmaking.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 64 of the Child Law (31)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 1 of Ministry of Manpower's Decree 118 (32)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Articles 1 and 2 of Ministry of Manpower's Decree 118 (32)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 89 of the Constitution; Article 291 of the Penal Code; Articles 2 and 3 of the Law on Combating Human Trafficking (31,33,34)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 89 of the Constitution; Article 291 of the Penal Code; Articles 2 and 3 of the Law on Combating Human Trafficking (31,33,34)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 116-bis(a) of the Child Law; Article 291 of the Penal Code; Articles 2 and 3 of the Law on Combating Human Trafficking; Articles 1–4 and 6 of the Law on the Combating of Prostitution (31,34,35)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 34 of the Law on Narcotics; Article 65 of the Child Law; Article 2.2 of Ministry of Manpower's Decree 118 (31,32,36)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	No	15	Ministry of Defense Guidelines on Youth Volunteers in the Armed Forces (37)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	Yes		Article 1 of the Law on Military and National Service (38)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Article 7-bis(b) of the Child Law (31)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15‡	Article 59(1) of the Child Law; Articles 80 and 238 of the Constitution (31,33)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 54 of the Child Law (31)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (39,40)

In 2021, the Egyptian Senate's Manpower Committee submitted a draft labor law to the Speaker of the Senate for review. (3) The draft law includes a provision to raise the minimum legal age for apprenticeships from 12 to 14 years. A separate proposed amendment would also allow the government to fine business owners 1,000 to 2,000 Egyptian pounds (64 to 128 USD) for violating the minimum age provisions, with double the fine for repeat offenses, and subject the business to the possibility of forced closure for up to 6 months. (3) However, the draft law does not include protections for domestic workers, who will remain vulnerable to exploitation. Additionally, Article 60 of the draft labor law prohibits employers from "requiring" children to work more than 6 hours a day, rather than outright limiting children's work to 6 hours per day. (41)

Egypt's current laws prohibit hazardous occupations and activities for children, including in quarrying, tanning, welding, spraying pesticides, and carrying heavy loads. (32) However, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not include brick production, in which there is evidence of exposure to hazardous temperatures. (2)

The minimum age for voluntary state military recruitment does not meet international standards as it is below age 16. (37)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Manpower	Enforces child labor laws and regulations through its inspection department, including receiving and investigating child labor complaints. Inspectors conduct labor inspections and report violations to the police, which operates under the Ministry of Interior. (2,7) If police investigations confirm criminal activity, cases are subsequently sent to the Prosecutor General's Office, which operates under the Ministry of Justice. (2,7)
Ministry of Interior	Investigates human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. Reports violations to the Public Prosecution Office under the Prosecutor General's Office (PGO). (2,7)
Ministry of Justice, Prosecutor General's Office	Prosecutes violations of laws related to the worst forms of child labor and human trafficking. (2,7)
Ministry of Local Development	Provides administrative and logistical support for the enforcement of child labor laws. Administers the Child Protection Committees. (2,7)
Administrative Control Authority	Investigates government corruption and human trafficking, and reports violations to the Ministry of Interior, which refers cases for prosecution. (2,42)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in Egypt took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Manpower that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including an insufficient number of inspectors.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

The government did not provide information on its labor law enforcement efforts specific to the worst forms of child labor for inclusion in this report.

Although the number of labor inspectors is unknown, the number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Egypt's workforce, which includes more than 28.4 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Egypt would need to employ roughly 1,896 labor inspectors. (43,44)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in Egypt took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including in financial resource allocation.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2020	2021

In 2021, Egypt increased its efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging and child sexual exploitation. (45) In January, 121 new human trafficking investigations involving forced child begging were opened as a result of Ministry of Interior campaigns to combat child exploitation. (45) Additionally, several prosecutions began for defendants charged with child sexual exploitation and forcing children to beg. (45) Moreover, the Prosecutor General's Office announced the opening of eight specialized prosecution offices to combat human trafficking and illegal migration crimes nationwide. (45)

The government did not provide information on its criminal law enforcement efforts specific to the worst forms of child labor for inclusion in this report. (3)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8).

However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including efficacy in accomplishing mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Council for Childhood and Motherhood (NCCM)	Coordinates enforcement of laws related to child labor, including its worst forms. Provides technical support and training about child labor for the Ministry of Manpower's inspectors. (46) Identifies and monitors at-risk children. Manages two 24-hour hotlines and receives reports of child labor and child trafficking. (16) Active in 2021. (3)
National Steering Committee for the National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor and Supporting Families	Coordinates efforts to implement the National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor and Supporting Families. Membership includes the Ministries of Manpower, Social Solidarity, Education, Agriculture, Interior, Planning, Finance, Investment and International Cooperation, Trade, Justice, Health, Local Development, and Awqaf, in addition to NCCM, the National Council of Women, the Central Agency for Population and Statistics, the National Media Agency, and Al Azhar University. (2,7) The committee met for the third time in 2021 and reviewed the draft update to the hazardous work list. (3)
National Coordinating Committee for Combating and Preventing Illegal Migration and Trafficking in Persons (NCCPIM and TIP)	Coordinates efforts to address human trafficking. (47) Led by an ambassador appointed by the Prime Minister, comprises 29 government entities, including the Ministries of Interior and Manpower. (16) Active in 2021. (45)
Child Protection Committees	Coordinate child protection efforts at the local level in partnership with community organizations. Led by the Ministry of Social Solidarity and chaired by local governors in each governorate, with subcommittees at each police station. (16) Active in 2021. (45)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies that are consistent with relevant international standards on child labor (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan Against the Worst Forms of Child Labor and Supporting Family (2018–2025)	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2025 and identify roles of government agencies responsible for assisting child laborers. (2,16) Developed in 2017 and formally adopted in 2018, the strategic objectives of the National Action Plan include expansion of the child labor knowledge base; capacity building of agencies providing support; social protection, with links to existing programs; enhanced education, including vocational education for children; and advocacy and awareness raising. (17) Active in 2021. (3)
National Strategy for Combating and Preventing Trafficking in Persons (2016–2021)	Aimed to maintain referral mechanisms, train law enforcement officials, and address trafficking of street children. (2,16) In 2021, NCCPIM and TIP worked on drafting an updated anti-trafficking strategy. (45)
National Strategy for Childhood and Motherhood (2018–2030)	Includes a child labor chapter that aims to promote dialogue on child labor legislation, including updating the hazardous work list; building the capacity of relevant government agencies, such as the Ministry of Manpower and NCCM; developing programs to address child labor; and expanding educational and vocational training opportunities. (2,13) Active in 2021. (3)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Expanding Access to Education and Protection for At-Risk Children in Egypt (2016–2021)	$32 million, EU-funded project implemented by UNICEF in cooperation with the Ministry of Education and NCCM to expand access to education for 36,000 children, including 6,000 children with disabilities, and to support 15 Child Protection Committees in 15 governorates. (48) Active in 2021. (49)
Solidarity and Dignity Program ( Takaful and Karama )†	Funded by the Ministry of Social Solidarity, promotes school attendance and health monitoring for children by providing income supplements to poor families. (2,13) This partnership between the government and WFP, UNDP, UNICEF, and the World Bank offers income supplements to poor families under the conditions that household children maintain at least an 80 percent attendance record in school and that mothers and children under age 6 provide demonstrable evidence of having been seen at health clinics four times per year. (2) Active in 2021. (50)
Children without Shelter†	Ministry of Social Solidarity-operated shelters for survivors of human trafficking, child survivors of trafficking and forced labor, and other vulnerable individuals. The Dar as-Salam shelter, operated by NCCM and the NGO Face, provides social services, including psychological counseling and health services. (51) Mobile units in 10 governorates work to reintegrate children with their families or place them in foster care. (52)
ACCEL Africa (2018–2022)	Aims to eliminate child labor in the cotton, textiles, and ready-made-garments sectors; implemented by ILO and funded by the Dutch government. ACCEL Africa-Egypt partners with the Ministries of Manpower, Education, Social Solidarity, and Agriculture, as well as NCCM, to improve policy, legal, and institutional frameworks. (53) In 2021, the government cooperated with the ACCEL project to train labor inspectors on the inspection checklist. (3)

† Program is funded by the Government of Egypt.

Although Egypt has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly for children involved in commercial sexual exploitation and quarrying limestone.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Egypt (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the types of work that children perform in Egypt that expose them to hazardous temperatures, such as brick production, are prohibited for children under age 18.	2017 – 2021
	Ensure that the law establishes age 16 as the minimum age for voluntary recruitment by the state military with safeguards for voluntariness.	2019 – 2021
Enforcement	Publish information on labor law enforcement efforts.	2011 – 2021
	Ensure the number of labor inspectors in Egypt meets the ILO's technical guidance.	2018 – 2021
	Increase the number of inspectors receiving training on child labor policies.	2019 – 2021
	Publish information on criminal law enforcement efforts.	2011 – 2021
Social Programs	Ensure universal access to free public education, especially for girls and refugee children, by addressing the cost of school fees, supplies, violence in schools, lack of documentation, and other barriers to education.	2010 – 2021
	Expand programs to address the full scope of the child labor problem, particularly in commercial sexual exploitation and in quarrying limestone.	2010 – 2021
	Expand the Takaful and Karama program to ensure that children are able to stay in school.	2020 – 2021

In 2021, El Salvador made moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Education invested over $53 million to purchase computers that benefited 120,092 students and 12,000 teachers in the country. The government signed a cooperation agreement with the governments of Honduras and Guatemala to strengthen coordination and efforts to address trafficking in persons. The government also published results from its annual multipurpose household survey, which identifies child labor prevalence in the country. However, children in El Salvador are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and in illicit activities, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in the harvesting of coffee. Law enforcement agencies continue to lack sufficient resources to enforce child labor laws throughout the country. Gaps also remain related to the lack of publicly available, comprehensive information on its labor and criminal law enforcement efforts. Finally, social programs do not adequately address the full scope of the child labor problem in the country.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in El Salvador are subjected to the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and in illicit activities, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in the harvesting of coffee. (1,2-4) In 2021, the Director General of Statistics and Census published results from the 2020 El Salvador Annual Multipurpose Household Survey, which found that around 88,300 children between the ages of 5 and 17 are working in El Salvador, a 5.3 percent decrease since 2019. (5,6) The survey also found that more than 60 percent of child laborers live in rural communities and 34 percent do not attend school. However, it did not include information about the sectors in which children were working, as well as details on the specific worst forms of child labor to which children were subjected. (5,6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in El Salvador.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	4.1 (41,069)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	91.1

	Forced begging, domestic work, agricultural labor, construction, and work in textiles (2-5,11)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in El Salvador often lack economic stability and educational opportunities and are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation. They are also recruited by gangs for illicit activities such as delivering threats, collecting extortion money, conducting surveillance activities, trafficking drugs, and committing homicides. (1,2,4,11,14) The MS-13 and Barrio 18 gangs are the most active in recruiting, training, and arming children in the country, in order to exert territorial control and produce revenue through criminal activities. Children are coerced to join the gangs, but once they join gang membership is permanent and they cannot leave without severe or deadly consequences for themselves or their families. (5) Gang recruits must commit murder to gain full membership status in the gang, thus forcing children to perpetrate homicides at the direction of adult gang leaders. (5) Additionally, gangs often force young girls into domestic servitude, including providing childcare, and into sexual exploitation. In some cases of gang activity, children are taken into prisons to be commercially sexually exploited by prisoners. (4,5,11) Reports indicate that those who resist have been assaulted or killed. (2,4,11) According to El Salvador's Trafficking in Person's Special Prosecutor and local NGOs, adolescent girls with limited education are among the most at risk of being trafficked. (14) LGBTQI+ adolescents are also at risk of being forced into commercial sexual exploitation by gangs. (2)

Children often emigrate to escape violence, extortion, and forced recruitment by gangs, in addition to seeking economic opportunities and family reunification. Human trafficking is also a driver of child migration. (4,15,16) Gangs target adolescent girls for forced commercial sex, causing them and sometimes their entire families to flee El Salvador in fear. Once en route, however, girls and other children from El Salvador remain vulnerable to human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. (4,15)

Multiple reports, including by third-party monitoring groups, indicate that the use of child labor in sugarcane harvesting has decreased since 2010. (1) However, despite ongoing government efforts to address child labor in this sector, recent data has not been published to demonstrate the impact of these efforts and provide details on specific government programs. (10)

At schools, children are recruited, extorted, and harassed by gangs, which may cause them to stop attending. (11) This situation is aggravated by the fact that a majority of schools are located in communities where gangs are present. (17,18) Indigenous children are sometimes threatened by gang members for crossing gang territorial lines that are set across ancestral indigenous land, forcing some of them to drop out of school. (19) Children who do not attend school are more vulnerable to child labor, including its worst forms. (1,20) Children in El Salvador face numerous barriers to education such as insufficient funds allocated to education and precarious school infrastructure. (18) Poverty, particularly in rural areas, also presents a barrier to education in El Salvador because children leave school to contribute to family income. (18) According to the Comprehensive Law of Protection of Childhood and Adolescence, a lack of identity documents should not prevent school enrollment. However, research indicates that children are still being required to have birth certificates to enroll in schools, in contravention of national law. (2,11) According to the Ministry of Education, this is standard procedure in every school in the country. In the cases when a child does not have a birth certificate, the school will consider their enrollment, but there is no guarantee of admission. (21) This practice may be having an adverse effect on the enrollment rates of children in school, because the cost for these documents is prohibitive for very poor families. (2,5,11) Approximately, 11 percent of children in the country do not have a birth certificate. (13) Reporting also indicates that children from indigenous communities disproportionately lack access to education. (1,2,11)

Many students drop out of school before completing their education, particularly during middle school, due to the existing barriers to education. (5) The Ministry of Education (MINED) reported that only 6 out of 10 students complete the compulsory education of 9 years, and over 851,794 students did not register for the 2021 school year. This is a 1.3 percent increase in the number of students failing to attend school compared to 2020. (5) The COVID-19 pandemic has increased the drop-out rate due to lack of access to computers and reliable internet connection needed to participate in virtual classes. (5) Rural areas have had the greatest difficulty keeping students in school. The General Directorate of Statistics' (DIGESTYC) 2020 Multiple Purpose and Household Survey reported in 2021 that only 6.5 percent of rural households had access to the Internet in 2020. (5) Additionally, most schools in the country are not constructed in a manner that would allow them to adjust to environmental changes. For example, 6 out of 10 schools are not prepared to face environmental risks, natural disasters, and epidemics. (5) Furthermore, 1,943 schools do not have adequate sanitation systems, 938 schools do not have access to drinking water, and an additional 964 schools have an inconsistent source of water. (5)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

El Salvador has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in El Salvador's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including a minimum age for work that is lower than the compulsory age for basic education.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Articles 114, 116, and 627 of the Labor Code; Article 38.10 of the Constitution; Articles 59 and 60 of the Law for the Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents (LEPINA) (22,23,24)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 105 and 627 of the Labor Code; Article 38 of the Constitution; Article 2 of Agreement 241 of 2011 (22,23,25)

* Country has no conscription

‡ Age calculated based on available information (24,31)

As the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. (22-24) While children are not permitted to be employed other than in light work until the age of 16, the light work framework is inconsistent with international standards because it does not specify the activities of work permitted. (22-24)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MTPS)	Inspects worksites for labor violations, including child labor, and monitors working conditions for adolescents who are granted work authorization. (2,12) Maintains a child labor unit dedicated to child labor law enforcement issues. (13,34) Refers cases of the worst forms of child labor to the Attorney General's Office. (2,13)
Ministry of Justice and Public Security	Enforces criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor, together with the Attorney General's Office, through the National Civil Police (PNC), which maintains a special trafficking in persons unit to investigate and prosecute human trafficking, including child trafficking. (2,5,12,26,35) Supports the Attorney General's Office in conducting investigations. (5)
Attorney General's Office	Responsible for initiating criminal proceedings for all types of the worst forms of child labor, as well as bringing the cases to trial. The Attorney General is the head of the office and is elected by the Legislative Assembly. (5)
The Salvadoran Institute for the Complete Development of Children and Adolescents (ISNA)	Receives referrals from law enforcement agencies on cases of criminal exploitation of children, including for forced labor, human trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation. Provides child victims with services, including shelter, medical attention, psychological help, and legal advice. (13,36)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2021, labor law enforcement agencies in El Salvador took actions to address child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MTPS) that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including insufficient financial resource allocation.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

The government provided limited information on its labor law enforcement efforts for inclusion in this report. In 2021, the funding for the labor inspectorate was reduced by almost 50 percent compared to 2020. The Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MTPS) has indicated that its budget is insufficient to address workers' rights. (11) In addition, inspectors focus primarily on the formal sector in urban areas due to resource constraints, despite the size of El Salvador's informal sector. (2,11,37) While the number of labor inspectors in the country is unknown, according to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed countries, El Salvador would need to employ roughly 191 labor inspectors as its workforce consists of over 2.8 million workers. (38,39)

Article 627 of the Labor Code specifies a default fine of no more than $60 per violation of all labor laws, including child labor laws. (23) Reports indicate that this amount is insufficient to deter labor violations. (35)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2021, criminal law enforcement agencies in El Salvador took actions to address child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including insufficient allocation of financial resources.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

The government did not provide information on its criminal law enforcement efforts for inclusion in this report. However, in October 2021, police officers arrested 30 individuals for sharing child pornography photos through social media applications. The Attorney General's Office also reported identifying 35 victims of child trafficking for sexual exploitation during the reporting period. (5,41) The Trafficking in Persons Unit of the Attorney General's Office reported it provided training during the reporting period to its 12 prosecutors, and some of these trainings were on human trafficking and smuggling, cybercrimes against children and adolescents, and on the Model of Cooperation for the Search of Missing Children. Additionally, the National Civil Police also received training on trafficking in persons during the year. (42) However, the scope of the government's criminal law enforcement efforts is insufficient to fully address the extent of the child labor problem in the country, particularly when it comes to the worst forms of child labor.

The Attorney General's Office stated the need for more investigators and analysts due to the complexity of the investigations and the specialized investigation technique required. (5,11) Reports also indicate that the Ministry of Justice and Public Security is underfunded, lacks a significant number of resources such as cars and computers, and is unable to support a sufficient number of investigators to collect and analyze evidence to process case backlogs. (1,13,14,37) Salvadoran police chiefs and prosecutors noted that difficulties in collecting, sharing, and gaining actionable insights from investigative information remain a challenge, especially because investigative bodies lack the capabilities to share information electronically. (43)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including a lack of efficacy in accomplishing mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor	Determines and implements government efforts to address child labor. Chaired by the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MTPS), includes 11 government agencies, along with representatives from labor unions, business associations, and NGOs. (12,44) Maintains a web-based monitoring system that allows government agencies to share and analyze information to coordinate the implementation of the Roadmap. (12) Research was unable to determine whether the National Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor Coordinating Body was active during the reporting period.
National Council Against Trafficking in Persons	Coordinates government efforts to address human trafficking and implements the National Policy Against Trafficking in Persons. (12,33) Led by the Ministry of Justice and Public Security and composed of 11 government agencies. (12,26) Research was unable to determine whether the National Council Against Trafficking in Persons Coordinating Body was active during the reporting period.
National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONNA)	Develops policies to protect the rights of children, including those regarding child labor, and implements the Law for the Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents (LEPINA) and the National Policy for the Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents in El Salvador (PNPNA). (12,24,45,46) Responds to cases involving the violation of children's rights by providing victim assistance. (13,47) In 2021, in compliance with the PNPNA, developed training and awareness activities on the rights of children and adolescents, including on the topic of the eradication of child labor. CONNA provided these activities to 1,640 people, 687 of which were children and adolescents. (5)
Departmental and Local Committees for Children's and Adolescents' Rights	Implement CONNA's policies, including PNPNA, at the departmental and municipal levels, and receive complaints of child rights violations. (12,24) Research was unable to determine whether the Departmental and Local Committees for Children's and Adolescents' Rights Coordinating Bodies were active during the reporting period.

In 2021, the government of El Salvador signed a cooperation agreement with the governments of Honduras and Guatemala to increase efforts against trafficking in persons. This agreement strengthens the existing coordination work that the Trafficking in Persons Unit of the Attorney General's Office performs in coordinating with prosecutors in the region on investigations, search and rescue of victims, repatriation or return of nationals or foreign victims, legal protection of victims, and collection of evidence. (42,48)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including the lack of mainstreaming child labor issues into relevant national policies.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Roadmap to Make El Salvador a Country Free of Child Labor and Its Worst Forms	Serves as the government's principal policy for eliminating the worst forms of child labor. Aimed to eliminate all child labor by 2020, by reducing poverty, improving education and health, protecting children's rights, and raising awareness of child labor. (49) Chaired by the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MTPS) along with the Ministry of Education (MINED), the Ministry of Foreign Relations, the Ministry of Economy, the Ministry of Health, and the Ministry of Agriculture and Livestock. (11) Although the policy was stated to conclude in 2020, some of the activities of the Roadmap were implemented in 2021 as they were identified as key actions to eliminate child labor. (5) In 2021, MTPS reported the results of its Plan of Integral Inspections that it began carrying out in 2020 in bars and nightclubs to identify cases of human trafficking and child labor. The inspections led to the sanctioning and temporary or permanent closure of several establishments. (21,50)
Torogoz Plan (Strategic Institutional Plan 2019–2024)†	Promotes educational inclusion and a protective school environment to prevent child labor and school dropouts. (5) The 2019 implementation date was delayed until 2021, partly due to the pandemic. (51,52) In 2021, MINED invested over $53 million to purchase 132,095 computers which benefited 120,092 students and about 12,000 teachers nationwide. (5,53) In alliance with Internet service providers, MINED also offered an "Internet Education Package" which allowed students and public school teachers to access different platforms without cost. (5,54)
National Policy for the Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents (PNPNA) 2013–2023	Sets government policies aimed at guaranteeing children's rights and protecting children from violence and harm, including the worst forms of child labor. Other objectives include reducing poverty and improving health services and access to quality education for children, including children with disabilities. (46) In 2021, the Salvadoran Institute for Comprehensive Child and Adolescent Development (ISNA) launched an awareness campaign on child labor called "Let's Promote a Life Free from Any Form of Exploitation Against Children and Adolescents". The campaign targeted the use of child labor in sugarcane harvest and the extraction of mollusks in the Departments of La Paz and Sonsonate. (5) In June 2021, as part of the PNPNA, MTPS launched a social media awareness campaign to eradicate child labor in commemoration to the World Day Against Child Labor. Additionally, ISNA launched an awareness campaign in October 2021 called "Let's Unite to Guarantee the Rights of Children and Adolescents" with financial support from Save the Children and Doctors of the World. (5)
National Policy Against Trafficking in Persons	Defines a comprehensive plan to address human trafficking of adults and children for labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Aims to improve prevention efforts, victim assistance, prosecution, inter-agency coordination, training, and anti-corruption efforts. (55,56) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken during the reporting period to implement the National Policy Against Trafficking in Persons.
National Policy to Support Early Childhood Development ( Crecer Juntos ) 2020–2030†	Established in January 2021. (13) Seeks to ensure children reach their maximum potential during early childhood, by guaranteeing the necessary conditions to provide them with quality services such as care, education, health, nutrition, and environments that protect their rights. It also aims to eradicate child labor in girls and boys between five and seven years old by 2030. (13,57)

† Policy was implemented during the reporting period.

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (1,5,35,58-61)

The government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the National Youth Policy (2010–2024). (13,62)

In 2021, the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare launched the Labor Market Information System (SIMEL) as a tool to analyze the labor market and main labor indicators in the country. (63) It assists in the development of public policy instruments that produce strategic impact on the labor market. (64) This system will provide information on the number of people working under dangerous conditions that could harm their physical and mental integrity, as well as on child labor. It will also provide information on the country's progress towards abolishing these types of occupations and detail challenges that remain to eliminate the prevalence of jobs of this nature. (65)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2021, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the inadequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Human Trafficking Public Awareness Campaigns†	Government public awareness campaigns implemented by the National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONNA) and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to raise awareness about the dangers of human trafficking. Includes the "Protection Starts at Home" awareness program and the "Call 1 2 3" Hotline, both of which promote respect toward the physical, psychological, and sexual integrity of children and adolescents. (12,40,66,67) The hotline offers children and adults the ability to consult specialists in emergency situations. (67) In 2021, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (MFA) joined the "Think Twice" regional campaign of the International Organization for Migration (IOM) to alert young people to false offers related to irregular migration and trafficking in persons. (5,68) As part of this campaign, MFA worked with IOM, the National Youth Institute, and the Mayor of San Salvador to develop a program discouraging youth from irregular migration and to prevent them from becoming victims of trafficking. (5) This program led to the painting of a mural in the Vista Bella community with a message associated with the campaign. In the process of creating the mural, two workshops were carried out focused on raising awareness and the prevention of irregular migration and human trafficking. (5)
Sustainable Families Programs‡	Set of government programs focused on improving health, education, productivity, and security, and eliminating poverty through inclusive and sustainable economic growth and access to public services. Includes Health and Education Bonus Programs that assist families with cash transfers conditioned on children's school attendance and health checkups. (13,55,69,70) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken during the reporting period to implement the Sustainable Families Programs.
School Prevention and Security Plan†	Programs implemented by the Ministry of Justice and Public Security and the National Civil Police (PNC) in schools with high levels of violence. Includes activities such as provision of psychological help, online classes, skills workshops for youth, and increased police patrols. (13,71-74) In 2021, PNC strengthened patrols in the proximities of schools in both urban and rural areas throughout the country. (5) In addition, agents of the prevention units developed training sessions with children and adolescents at various schools, particularly in those considered more vulnerable to crime. These training sessions sought to remove students from risky situations, such as affiliation with gang members, drug trafficking or use, and use of alcohol. (5) This initiative was supported by the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs of the U.S. Department of State. (5)
USDOL-Funded Projects	Projects which aim to reduce the incidence of child labor, including: Increasing Collective Action to Address Child Labor, Forced Labor, and Other Unacceptable Conditions of Work in El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras (2021–2026), a $8.4 million project implemented by Pan American Development Foundation in El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras; Youth Pathways-Central America (2015–2021), a $17.2 million project implemented by Catholic Relief Services in El Salvador and Honduras; and Reducing Incidence of Child Labor and Harmful Conditions of Work in Economic Strengthening Initiatives (RICHES) (2017–2022), a $1.6 million project implemented by the Grameen Foundation in El Salvador and the Philippines. (66,75,76) In 2021, the Youth Pathways-Central America project provided support and services for at-risk children and youth affected by the pandemic and natural disasters, such as in-kind food and biosecurity kits. It also assisted youth to continue school online as schools were closed for in-person instruction and provided employability skills training. (77) Additional information is available on the USDOL website.

† Program is funded by the Government of El Salvador.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (1,72,78,79)

In 2021, the Ministry of Education continued providing financial assistance to children in the form of school uniforms, shoes, and supplies, with its economic investment reaching a value of $73.5 million. The Ministry of Education also contributed approximately $14.2 million to the School Food and Health Program. (5)

Despite efforts to address human trafficking, services for boys who are human trafficking survivors are limited, which may leave them vulnerable to being trafficked again. (43) Although the government implements several programs to reduce the worst forms of child labor by assisting poor families and school children, research found no evidence that the government has programs that assist child laborers who may not be living with their families and not attending school, such as children engaged in domestic work. (13)

Civil society organizations in El Salvador have raised concerns that actions taken by the government, such as the creation of a commission to investigate the allocation of funds to civil society organizations, may have negative repercussions on them. They are specifically concerned that these actions will affect the ability to operate of independent civil society organizations, including those working on children's issues, which in turn could increase the vulnerability of children to exploitation. (80-82)
